A Pessimist.

"Don't be too anxious to get a husband," said the wise matron. "Don't go around hunting for one."

"Think I should just sit down and wait for one, eh?" replied the maiden.

Quite Natural.

Husband—What did you think when you heard the chandelier fall last night? Wife—Why, I thought you had been detained on business again and were getting upstairs as quietly as you could.

WEDDING BELLS.

Big, Big Words.

"Those who are accustomed to ridicule present day scientists because of their fondness for big words," said the etymologist, "will find them much more moderate in the concoction of words than the old timers.

"For instance, I have just come across the account of a scientific treatise published in the seventeenth century that contains words even much more cumbersome than its title, which, by the way, is 'Panzoologicomineralogia,' a good mouthful surely, yet the meaning is easily ascertained when the word is reduced to its component parts.

"The list of long titles that were then favorites would cause the modern book clerk a spasm, yet the list could be gone into indefinitely. A play in blank verse published in the latter part of the seventeenth century had as its alluring title 'Chrononhotonthologos,' and this was the opening sentence:

"'Aldeborontiphoscophornio, where left you Chrononhotonthologos?'

"If the modern mouthing actor can hardly get simple Anglo-Saxon words over the footlights, how could he get along with that morsel?"—New York Herald.

Great Writers Not Correct Writers.

There is not a single great author in our literature in whose works numerous errors have not been pointed out or thought to be pointed out. They are charged with violating rules involving the purity if not the permanence of the language. A somewhat depressing inference follows from the situation thus revealed. The ability to write English correctly does not belong to the great masters of our speech. It is limited to the obscure men who have devoted themselves to the task of showing how far these vaunted writers have fallen short of the ideas of linguistic propriety entertained by their unrecognized betters. As a result of these critical crusades there is no escape from the dismal conclusion that the correct use of the language is not to be found in the authors whom every one reads with pleasure, but is an accomplishment reserved exclusively for those whom nobody can succeed in reading at all.—Professor Thomas R. Lounsbury in Harper's Magazine.

Squirrels Are "Handy."

The handiness of the squirrel is something extraordinary in the animal world. He sits up on his hind paws and uses the fore paws in many ways just as a man does. He strikes with it and wards off a blow from another, and squirrel quarrels rarely go further than attempts to cuff each other like children. A lady who lives in our county and who is the protector of squirrels in that region told me that she had contrived a little rack to be filled with nuts, so that they came to the opening singly, one dropping into the place as another was taken out, and this was fixed by her window so that she could watch the squirrels come. One day a squirrel took the last nut and was quietly eating it on the window bench when another came and, finding none in the rack, went up to the eating squirrel and gave him a deliberate box on the ear and went away.—W. J. Stillman in Century.

Eyeglasses and Romance.

It is curious to observe that even the greatest realists do not venture to bestow eyeglasses on their heroines. It is rather odd, too, seeing how many charming women do in real life wear them and are not debarred by them from the most dramatic careers and the most poignant emotions, but while the modern novelist has bestowed eyeglasses on everybody else he has not yet had the hardihood to put them on the nose of his heroine. Why?—Mrs. John Lane in London Outlook.

Incarnate Umbrellas.

We English, of course, get what we call hardened to horrible climatic changes. Nevertheless I am convinced that our solemnity of demeanor is generated by our gray skies, our piercing east winds, our heavy, yellow fogs and our slushy roads and pavements. The waterproof face is the direct result of a firmament of lead. Many of us English people look like incarnate umbrellas.—London Queen.

Diet and Digestion.

Abstemiousness in diet is very conducive to a good digestion. It is preferable to be a little underfed than at all overfed. Hence we come to one of the first causes of indigestion in the adult, too large a quantity of food. After an ordinary meal the food should all have left the stomach by the end of six or seven hours. If owing to an excessive quantity the stomach cannot deal with the amount some food remains in the stomach and ferments. This creates discomfort, pain, wind, nausea and perhaps vomiting, by means of which the abused stomach gets rid of its burden. If the sufferer is not thus fortunately sick the best thing he can do is to drink a large tumbler of lukewarm water, which will probably induce vomiting and so wash out the stomach. Half a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda added to the fluid will cause still more relief. During the next twenty-four hours the lightest diet, such as a little tea and dried toast, some boiled rice, a little arrowroot or corn flour, should be taken.

Chotohazree at the Gymkhana.

In "Modern India" the author, William Eleroy Curtis, records his meeting with the word gymkhana and "ventures to say that nobody who has not been in India can guess what that means."

And if you want another conundrum, what is a chotohazree? It is customary for smart people to have their chotohazree at the gymkhana, and I think you would be pleased to join them after taking the beautiful drive which leads to the place. Nobody knows where the word was derived from, but it is used to describe a country club—a bungalow hidden under a beautiful grove on the brow of a cliff that overhangs the bay—with all of the appurtenances, golf links, cricket grounds, racket courts and indoor gymnasium, and everybody stops there on an afternoon drive to have chotohazree, which is the local term for afternoon tea and for early morning coffee.

Winding Your Watch.

The old superstitious belief that you will change your luck if you stop winding your watch at night and wind it in the morning may have some slight basis in fact, according to a jeweler, who says that the morning is the proper time to do the winding. This is not only because the hour of rising is for the average man much more regular than that for retiring, but even the soberest and most orderly of men are apt to relax and prone to carelessness at bedtime, when more or less worn by the wear and tear of the day. In this condition the winding is apt to be done in a jerky, irregular sort of way or too far or not far enough. "Nine people out of ten wind their watches on going to bed," said the jeweler, "but if they would do it when they get up, at some regular point in the process of making their toilet, they would do it much better."—Philadelphia Record.

Curious Almshouse.

The most curious almshouse in England is St. Mary's hospital at Chichester. There eight old ladies live actually in the church, which is a fine old building dating from 1680. It was originally a monastery, but when Queen Elizabeth came to visit there she turned it into an almshouse to endure as long as almshouses exist. The old ladies have two neat little rooms each down the sides of the main church, with windows looking out on the garden. They have each a coal supply, a kitchen range, water and gas. At one end of the church is the chapel, where daily services are held. The choir stalls are beautifully carved old oak, the original seats that the monks used. The church stands in a quiet little square.

Too Serious.

While a great many persons probably take themselves too seriously, entertaining an altogether exaggerated opinion of their ability and worth, not many nowadays go to the extreme length of the German whom the English poet Coleridge met at Frankfort. He always took off his hat when he ventured to speak of himself. Were this practice to become general what a number of people would be permanently bareheaded!

Boarding a Hansom.

Have you ever noticed the right way to get into a hansom when two people are riding? Few persons know what to do. In nine cases out of ten the one who enters first seats himself on the off side. But this is wrong. If, on getting in first, you take the near seat, your companion can then enter in ease and comfort, which otherwise he could not.

To Waterproof Canvas.

Scientific American gives this recipe for waterproofing for canvas: Soft soap dissolved in hot water and a solution of iron sulphate added. The sulphuric acid combines with the potash of the soap and the iron oxide is precipitated with the fatty acid as insoluble iron soap. This is washed and dried and mixed with linseed oil.

Masculine.

Mrs. Hix—Mrs. June strikes me as being entirely too masculine for a woman. Mrs. Dix—Yes, indeed. Why, every time she has an ache or a pain she makes as much fuss about it as a man would.

Discretion.

First Lawyer—It seems to me you let that last witness down pretty easily in your cross examination. Second Lawyer—I had to. He is my tailor, and I owe him a big bill.

When a man says, "Of course it's no business of mine," it is a sure sign that he is going to do the best he can to make it his business.

EX-GOVERNOR OF OREGON

CAPITOL BUILDING, SALEM, OREGON.

Peruna is known from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Letters of congratulation and commendation testifying to the merits of Peruna as a catarrh remedy are pouring in from every State in the Union. Dr. Hartman is receiving hundreds of such letters daily. All classes write these letters, from the highest to the lowest.

The outdoor laborer, the indoor artisan, the clerk, the editor, the statesman, the preacher—all agree that Peruna is the catarrh remedy of the age. The stage and rostrum, recognizing catarrh as their greatest enemy, are especially enthusiastic in their praise and testimony.

Any man who wishes perfect health must be entirely free from catarrh. Catarrh is well-nigh universal. Peruna is the best safeguard known.

A Letter From the Ex-Governor of Oregon.

The ex-Governor of Oregon is an ardent admirer of Peruna. He keeps it continually in the house. In a letter to Dr. Hartman, he says:

STATE OF OREGON,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.:

Dear Sirs---I have had occasion to use your Peruna medicine in my family for colds, and it proved to be an excellent remedy. I have not had occasion to use it for other ailments.

Yours very truly, W. M. Lord.

It will be noticed that the Governor says he has not had occasion to use Peruna for other ailments. The reason for this is, most other ailments begin with a cold.

Ask Your Druggist for Free Peruna Almanac for 1906.

Some men are born great and keep great all their lives, while others who are born all right, become small and mean of their own accord.

I am sure Piso's Cure for Consumption saved my life three years ago.—Mrs. Thos. Robbins, Norwich, N. Y., Feb. 17, 1900.

He jests at scars who never shaved himself.—N. Y. Times.

IN CONSTANT AGONY.

A West Virginian's Awful Distress Through Kidney Troubles.

W. L. Jackson, merchant, of Parkersburg, W. Va., says: "Driving about in bad weather brought kidney troubles on me, and I suffered twenty years with sharp, cramping pains in the back and urinary disorders. I often had to get up a dozen times at night to urinate. Retention set in, and I was obliged to use the catheter. I took to my bed, and the doctors failing to help, began using Doan's Kidney Pills. The urine soon came freely again, and the pain gradually disappeared. I have been cured eight years, and though over 70, am as active as a boy."

AMUSING ADVERTISEMENTS.

An advertiser in a British magazine says: "Old artificial teeth bought. Call, or if forwarded by post, utmost value per return. Messrs. Smith, manufacturing dentists, Oxford street, London. Established 100 years."

From the London Morning Post: "Irish lady, much reduced income, would be most grateful to lady (young, medium size), who would give her left-off clothes to help her maintain social position; references. Address ——."

A notification appears in a Surrey (Eng.) newspaper from a Guildford chimney sweep to the effect that, owing to the increase in his business as a sweep, he is "unable to accept musical engagements for public concerts, etc."

A tailor in Boston, Lincolnshire, England, has hit upon a novel advertisement. He has painted a letter of his name on the back of each of ten tortoises and has placed the ten in the window of his shop. He offers a prize of ten dollars to the first person who sees the tortoises in a line, so arranged that the letters are in the order in which they appear in his name.

Of eccentric advertisements the London Chronicle remarks: "Probably to the end of time respectable women will 'want washing,' though it is hard to reconcile their respectability with their lack of personal cleanliness. Butchers, too, who are prepared to 'kill anything' when in search of employment, are well matched by the dealer who, wanting a salesman, predicates that he must be 'alive when wanted.'"

GOOD BLOOD FOR BAD

"In the lead mines I was at work on my knees with my elbows pressed against rock walls, in dampness and extremes of cold," said Mr. J. G. Menkel, of 2975 Jackson avenue, Dubuque, Iowa, in describing his experience to a reporter, "and it is not surprising that I contracted rheumatism. For three years I had attacks affecting the joints of my ankles, knees and elbows. My ankles and knees became so swollen I could scarcely walk on uneven ground and a little pressure from a stone under my feet would cause me so much pain that I would nearly sink down. I was often obliged to lie in bed for several days at a time. My friends who were similarly troubled were getting no relief from doctors and I did not feel encouraged to throw money away for nothing. By chance I read the story of Robert Yates, of the Klauer Manufacturing Co., of Dubuque, who had a very bad case of rheumatism. I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, the remedy he had used. In three or four weeks after beginning to use the pills, I was much better and in three months I was well. The swelling of the joints and the tenderness disappeared, I could work steadily and for eight years I have had no return of the trouble. My whole family believe in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Both my sons use them. We consider them a household remedy that we are sure about."

What Dr. Williams' Pink Pills did for Mr. Menkel they are doing for hundreds of others. Every dose sends galloping through the veins, pure, strong, rich, red blood that strikes straight at the cause of all ill health. The new blood restores regularity, and braces all the organs for their special tasks. Get the genuine Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at your druggists' or direct from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N.Y.

Twenty-Five Bushels of Wheat to the Acre

means a productive capacity in dollars of over $16 per acre.

This on land, which has cost the farmer nothing, but the price of tilling it, tells its own story.

The Canadian Government gives absolutely free to every settler 160 acres of such land.

Lands adjoining can be purchased at from $6 to $10 per acre from railroad and other corporations.

Already 175,000 farmers from the United States have made their homes in Canada.

Sandstone.—Peter Frank of Ranning, while cleaning a rifle accidentally shot his companion, Austin Wyne, the 19-year-old son of Superintendent Wyne of the Barber Asphalt company's quarries.

WAS A GOOD WATCH-DOG.

He Barked a Whole Lot and Kept the Sheep Within the Fold.

During the late Rev. Elijah Kellogg's pastorate in Maine he was persistently opposed by the citizens, of no religious convictions, who took malicious satisfaction in discovering and publishing inconsistencies in the lives of the members of Mr. Kellogg's church. For reasons of his own, which the Boston Herald does not give in printing the story, the citizen decided to remove to another part of the state.

Meeting Dr. Kellogg one day, shortly before his departure, he said:

"Well, I suppose you have heard that I am going to leave town, and I dare say you will be glad of it."

"Glad of it? Why, no," replied Mr. Kellogg. "I shall be very sorry to lose you. You are so useful to me in my work I hardly know how I can spare you."

"Spare me?" repeated the citizen, greatly puzzled. "How is that?"

"Why," said the old minister, witht a gentle smile, "every time a sheep gets its foot out of my fold you bark from one end of the town to the other. You are the best watch-dog I ever knew."

Facts and Proof.

Hulett, Wyo., Dec. 4th (Special).—An ounce of fact is worth a ton of theory, and it is evidence founded on fact that backs up every box of Dodd's Kidney Pills. The evidence of people who know what they do. Mrs. Mary Taber, highly esteemed resident of Hulett, says:

"I know Dodd's Kidney Pills are a valuable medicine because I have used them. I took seven boxes and they cured me of a severe attack of Kidney Trouble. They relieved me from the first dose, and when I had finished the last box I had no pain and my Kidneys are now acting properly."

MERCILESS ITCHING.

"For two years my neck was covered with sores, the humor spreading to my hair, which fell out, leaving an unsightly bald spot, and the soreness, inflammation, and merciless itching made me wild. Friends advised Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, and after a few applications the torment subsided, to my great joy. The sores soon disappeared, and my hair grew again, as thick and healthy as ever. I shall always recommend the Cuticura Remedies. (Signed) Harry J. Spalding, 104 West 104th street, New York City."

Cause and Effect.

Tom—I started to propose to Miss Hoamley-Rich last evening, but I lost my courage.

Dick—And didn't she help you out?

"No, but her father did; that's when I lost my courage."—Brooklyn Eagle.

WALSH'S BANK FAILURES.

John R. Walsh's three banks in Chicago, the Chicago national, Home Savings and Equitable company, were placed in liquidation after an investigation. The local clearing house guarantees payment in full. Efforts to build the Southern Indiana railroad and connecting lines against the opposition of great railway interests, resulting in the expenditure of millions of dollars without quick financial returns, are said to have been the causes of the failure. A total of $26,000,000 in deposits of public funds and private accounts are involved in the crash. Any loss in the failure will fall on the officers and stockholders of the banks.

Confidence reigns in the Chicago world after the Walsh liquidation, and examination shows that the deposed banker's securities have a far greater value than that originally estimated.

The Chicago clearing-house committee guarantees funds to complete building John R. Walsh's Chicago Southern railroad.

CONGRESSIONAL NEWS.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS BRANDS MEMBERS WITH NEW NAMES.

"KIDS" TERM UNWELCOME

Congressman Barchfield, of Pittsburg, Political Patron Saint to Germans of That City—Big and Little Men.

Washington.—Hereafter the legislative novitiate will be known as a "kid." John Sharp Williams, the minority leader of the house, applied that term on the first day of the session in a way that will stick. It is suggestive of a little more freshness than the old title of "colt," which the late Speaker Reed applied to the newcomer in congress. Mr. Williams in a way branded the new name upon a new member by an operation almost as painful as the branding of a maverick with a red-hot iron.

The occasion was in a satirical speech Mr. Williams was making upon the rules of the house in which he pretended to speak for an element in the majority side whom he termed "kids" and "blanket Indians." Young Mr. Wharton of Chicago, under 30, youthful looking, with fresh, clean shaven cheeks, jaunty attire, a smile of assurance and a heliotrope four-in-hand necktie, did not like the apellation of "kids." He rose in his place and begged to interrupt the gentleman from Mississippi and ask him whom he meant by the "kids" in the house.

This was John Sharp Williams' opportunity. With a deprecatory shrug of the shoulders and in most mellifluous accents as he bowed to the youth from Chicago he declared: "I should have showed more reverence, I know, but the personal appearance of my interrogator sufficiently answers his question."

The point was so apparent, Mr. Wharton was so kiddish in appearance that the big audience caught on and howled with delight. The youth went down, the first victim of a floor skirmish, easily bowled over by the trained parliamentary knight who had been accustomed to measure his wits with those of Reed, Dalzell, Grosvenor, Hepburn and other lightning thinkers on the floor of the house. So the new members will have to accept their designation as "kids" whether or not they like it. The "blanket Indians" referred to by Mr. Williams are the few republicans who are at times disposed to kick over the traces.

The credit of being the biggest man in congress still abides with Mr. "Cy" Sulloway of New Hampshire. It was found that when the newly elected congressman from Pittsburg, Dr. Barchfield known locally as the "long doctor," came in Sulloway would have to look to his laurels, but the giant from New Hampshire can look down on Barchfield. He is six feet seven, while Barchfield is only six feet four. Then Sulloway is about six inches broader across the shoulders than the new Pittsburg congressman.

Sulloway is a quaint figure. He is a man of considerable ability, which he devotes almost exclusively to the interest of old soldiers, as he is at the head of the committee on pensions. He is modest and only occupies some six lines in the congressional directory, where statesmen are wont to set forth who they are and what they are. He dresses in a long frocked broadcloth coat, with a velvet collar. This garment is of generous proportions and hangs loosely on his big frame. It would afford cloth enough for two or three ordinary coats. Mr. Sulloway allows his long brown hair to grow down over his collar and wears a mustache and chin whisker of equally luxurious growth. His hands and feet are big and so is his heart.

This big congressman is a veteran of the civil war, but says nothing about his record. He simply states in his biography that he was admitted to the bar in 1863 and has practiced law since 1864. He had, however, seen much service, and offered his big body as a target for confederate bullets before that. At one time the simple faith of the Salvation Army appealed to him and he joined that organization and was proud to beat the big bass drum in their street services.

The "Long Doctor."

The "long doctor" from Pittsburg, Congressman Barchfield, who is pushing Sulloway pretty hard for the title of "giant of the house," is a comparatively young man, but a very successful German politician. He comes from the South Side, Pittsburg, a section of the city largely inhabited by thrifty social Germans, who regard the "long doctor" as their political patron saint. It is a social community and Dr. Barchfield keeps open house, where many parties, in his expressive language, "have been pulled off." Simple little affairs they are—some pumpernickel and cheese, a few steins of beer and a friendly game of pinochle or sixty-six, furnish the entertainment, but they have proven powerful popular and have landed the doctor in the house.

Last summer Dr. Barchfield accepted the invitation of Mr. Bartholdt, of Missouri, to become a member of the Interparliamentary Union—a non-official body of statesmen of various countries, whose purpose is to secure international arbitration. The union met in Germany and discussed peace and arbitration to its heart's content. The American members were presented to Kaiser William and had a very cosy social chat with the war lord. As soon as the kaiser clapped eyes on Barchfield he held out his hand, grasped that of the Pittsburger heartily and, looking over the strapping form of the latter, declared:

"How I wish I could enlist you in my bodyguard! What a superb grenadier you would make."

Barchfield acknowledged the compliment, but expressed a preference for the halls of congress at Washington. The kaiser laughingly admitted that the life of an American congressman might be more desirable than that of a member of the emperor's bodyguard.

Boys in Appearance.

While there are physical giants in this house there are also men of very diminutive stature. Mr. Samuel W. Smith of Michigan is still the midget of the house. He is of very small stature and only his well-kept, luxurious mustache saves him from the embarassment of being taken for a page on the floor of the house. Mr. Smith's brain is away out of proportion to his diminutive body, as he is one of the ablest men of the very able delegation from the Wolverine state. He is a lawyer of high standing in his district and in debates on the floor of the house he has proven himself capable and convincing.

Mr. Smith has a rival for the distinction of being the smallest man in the house. Mr. Frank S. Dickson of Illinois is more youthful looking than the Michigan member and is almost as short in stature. Dickson has already paid the penalty of his boyish appearance, as he has been summoned by older members more than once to run errands for them on the supposition that he is a page. The Illinois congressman regards those mistakes as good jokes and keeps up the illusion sometimes for his own amusement and that of his friends. He was chosen one of the tellers during the election of the speaker when congress opened.

Mr. Dickson was barely old enough to get into the house. He was nominated and elected before he had reached the constitutional age of 25; but passed that mark before he took his seat in the house. He is slight in form, not above five feet four in height and his face is as innocent of whisker as that of a lad of 14. He dresses in youthful clothes and would readily pass for a boy of 16. He is one of the "accidents" that were carried into the house on the Roosevelt wave of last year. He made little or no effort to be elected, but the big vote for Roosevelt carried him along.

BELONGS TO NOWHERE.

When the boundary between Michigan and Wisconsin was drawn the surveyors were evidently in a bit of a hurry, for it now turns out that some 250,000 acres of land supposed to have been included in Michigan's acreage is beyond it and belonging to nowhere. The territory in dispute is big enough to form a fair-sized province in Russia, and more than one bloody war has been fought in Europa to conquer a strip of land smaller than the "derelict territory" of Michigan. Here it was not missed for a generation. The United States geographic survey found out the mistake of the original boundary makers only the other day.

No vehicle which moves on wheels will, in the opinion of many scientists, attain the speed of 200 miles an hour.

GOPHER GOSSIP.

St. Paul.—The city tax budget for next year is adopted at $2,960,968.

White Bear.—The county may be sued for damages if the level of White Bear lake is raised.

St. Paul.—Prof. Weltbrecht says that 500 is the economical unit of attendance at high schools.

St. Paul.—Dr. W. H. W. Boyle resigns the House of Hope pastorate and accepts a call to Lake Forest, Ill.

Minneapolis.—A bookstore for the sale of Swedish books has been opened at 520 Second avenue south.

St. Paul.—The labor commissioner will permit no boys under sixteen to act as pages in the legislature.

Eden Valley.—Jess Racy, a former resident of this village, was drowned in Cross lake.

St. Paul.—A room has been set aside for checking wraps and parcels for the convenience of visitors to the capitol.

Northfield.—Laird, Norton & Co. of Winona have purchased the business of the Northfield Lumber company and have engaged W. F. Crary as local manager.

St. Peter.—A survey made of a lake may become the basis of an interesting action in the Nicollet county district court.

Northfield.—The thirteenth annual debate between the Athenian and Philomathean societies of Carleton college, resulted in a victory for the Philomatheans.

Minneapolis.—Following the lead of their St. Paul brothers, several Minneapolis hotel and restaurant men formed the Minneapolis Hotel and Restaurant Keepers' association.

Minneapolis.—William Kelley, 2205 Nineteenth avenue south, was struck by some protruding lumber on a car in the Milwaukee yards yesterday afternoon and seriously injured.

Minneapolis.—The cadet battalion at St. Thomas college is now fully organized and officered. Lieut. E. K. Massee of the Seventh United States infantry has been detailed by the war department as military instructor and commandant.

Washington.—In an opinion by Justice Holmes the supreme court of the United States today upheld the validity of the Minnesota state law holding railroad companies responsible for injuries done to employes through the carelessness of other employes.

Red Wing.—In the case of Christian J. Floan against the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road for damages, the jury today returned a verdict for $2,000, the full amount asked. Floan was run over by a switch engine.

LATTA FROM PLUMMER.

Rhoda, Minn.
Dec. 24th 1905.

Editor Sunbeam.

While glancing over the last weeks issue of the Plummer Pioneer, we chanced to see an item about the editors trip to Lillo, last week. He goes on and says that he was agreeably surprised at the highly developed appearance of the farms in that vicinity. Quite a compliment indeed, to the lately doomed natives of the wilderness. We only regret that the worthy editor did not make his journey a little longer so that he could have taken in this part of the wilderness, we could have assured him that he would have been more then "agreeably surprised" for every mile that he would have made "not so much at the natives" but we mean at the great advance and general-appeafance of our country. We must however admit that we are located right here in the heart of the wilderness, (according to sworn affidavits) but must say that we are doing fairly well here. We have here within a radius of six miles, six general stores, five Post Offices, two blacksmith shops, and running schools, and right here among us we have the Sunbeam, which makes its weekly visits to a large circle of homesteaders and others. We have farms here that have a thousand dollars improvments on them, with seventy five to one hundred acres under cultivation, and every quarter of land that is worth having is occupied. But when we think of the editors compliment, and then turn to the "sworn affidavits" of the Carr, Eastman, and Latta "gang", and note the contrast, we can't help but sit right down and enjoy a good hearty laugh

Knew the Crowd.

A street preacher in a west of Scotland town called a policeman who was passing and complained about being annoyed by a certain section of the audience and asked him to remove the objectionable ones.

"Weel, ye see," replied the cautious officer. "It would be a hard job for me tae spot them, but I'll tell ye what I'd dae if I were you."

"What would you do?" eagerly inquired the preacher.

"Just gae round wi' the bat!"

Nilsson and Patti.

When Christine Nilsson, the great singer, was asked her opinion of various singers, she gave it very candidly of every one, including herself and Mme. Albani, but she never once alluded to Mme. Patti.

"You have not mentioned Mme. Patti," remarked the pertinacious interviewer.

"No," said Mme. Nilsson, "I have not. You are asking about singers. I do not regard Patti as a singer. I place her among the angels. A Patti only comes to a planet once during that planet's existence." Such an absence of stage jealousy has probably never been equaled.

Date Mark a Bagdad Malady.

Bagdad date mark is the name given to a mysterious disease that attacks nearly every one who stays in Bagdad for any length of time and is found also at Aleppo and other places in Turkish Asia. It is a sore that comes only once, but lasts a year, leaving a scar the shape of a date. Nearly all the natives are marked with it. No remedy has been found for it, but hyposulphite of soda seems to have some effect on the mark.

The Beauty of the Lilies.

"Er—Miss Hardy—Grace—do you not think that these valley lilies are very beautiful?"

"Not so beautiful as orange blossoms, Mr. Jones."

And, thus assisted and encouraged, he presently drifted out upon the wide, wide sea of wedded bliss.

Intimation.

"So the insolent fellow refused to pay his rent?"

"He did not say so in words, but he intimated it."

"How so?"

"He kicked me downstairs."—Paris Journal.

A Pessimist.

"Think I should just sit down and wait for one, eh?" replied the maiden.

Quite Natural.

Husband—What did you think when you heard the chandelier fall last night? Wife—Why, I thought you had been detained on business again and were getting upstairs as quietly as you could.

The Modesty of Hokusai.

Young artists, not gaining distinction early, have had various instances to quote as showing that masterly performance often came late in life. In Dora Amsden's book on Japanese art it is set forth that this is what the celebrated Japanese artist Hokusai wrote about himself: "From the age of six I had a mania for drawing the forms of things. By the time I was fifty I had published an infinity of designs, but all I have produced before the age of seventy is not worth taking into account. At seventy-five I learned a little about the real structure of nature—of animals, plants and trees, birds, fishes and insects. In consequence, when I am eighty I shall have made still more progress. At ninety I shall penetrate the mystery of things. At a hundred I shall certainly have reached a marvelous stage, and when I am 110 everything I do—be it but a line or dot—will be alive. I beg those who live as long as I do to see if I do not keep my word." Hokusai died in 1849 at the age of eighty-nine.

Why Rossini Wept.

When Meyerbeer died his son composed a funeral march which "remembered his dead father." Full of emotion, the young man took it to Rossini.

"Play it, maestro," he pleaded; "play it. I wrote it in expression of my grief and mourning for my dead father."

Rossini took it up, placed it on his piano and played it. Tears rolled down his cheeks. Utter sadness dwelt upon his countenance.

"You weep," cried young Meyerbeer, beside himself with joy at the effect upon the great master.

"Yes, I weep," rejoined Rossini amid tears.

"And why?"

"Because," replied Rossini, "I am wishing that you were dead and it was your father who had written the funeral march."

A Reflection.

Daisy—Why was Maude Oldgirl so angry about her photographs? Didn't they flatter her? Maisie—Oh, they were as pretty as the artist could make them, but on the back of each one it said, "The original of this picture is carefully preserved."

Strategy.

The minister who had difficulty in keeping his parishioners' eyes fixed on him during the sermon solved the difficulty by placing a large clock directly behind him.—Liverpool Mercury.

The Difference.

Freddie—What's the difference between being sick and an invalid? Cobwigger—An invalid, my boy, is one who makes those around him sick.—Harper's Bazar.

Great Grief and Head Shaving.

Among the ancients shaving the head was a very common mode of expressing great grief or sorrow. Sometimes it was done by the priest or some other religious functionary formally cutting off the hair, sometimes by violently plucking it out by the roots. In extreme cases among men the beard as well as the hair was either cut off or plucked out. The idea seems to have been that mourners should divest themselves of that which under ordinary circumstances was considered most beautiful, ornamental and becoming. Lucian—and he is not the only one of the ancient writers by any means who gives points on this queer mourning custom—says that the Egyptians expressed their intense sorrow by cutting off the hair upon the death of their god Apis and that the Syrians acted in the same manner at the death of Adonis.

Olympiodorus remarks concerning Job i, 20, that the ancients, among whom long hair was regarded as an ornament, cut it off in times of mourning, but that those who commonly wore it short suffered it upon such occasions to grow long.

Irish Surnames.

There is a magnificent sonority in the names of MacGiollamoholmoge, MacGulshenan, MacGiraghty, O'Doc-yarma, O'Howley, O'Quigley, O'Mulclohy and O'Mulmoghery. Many of the names are extinct, but a large proportion are still in evidence, and, what is more, in nearly every case the families bearing them are to be found in the same localities formerly inhabited by them—Dohertys in Donegal, Driscolls in Cork, Macdermotts in Connaught, Meaghers in Tipperary and O'Sullivans in Cork and Kerry. It is a notorious fact that many of the families which have come to be regarded as typically Irish are of alien extraction. Thus the Plunketts are of Danish origin, the Burkes, Dillons, Roches, Husseys and all the tribe of Fitz are Anglo-Norman, while the Mitchells are English.—London Spectator.

A Tooth.

A tooth is a living structure. Inside of each tooth is a cavity filled with pulp, which gives it life. Nerves and blood vessels connect this pulp with the general system and circulation of the body. The ivory surrounding the pulp is covered over by a surface of enamel. Both ivory and enamel are harder than any other bones, because they contain a greater quantity of bone earth. Enamel on the tops of the teeth is one-sixteenth of an inch thick. It consists of little six sided prisms placed side by side and held together by an exquisitely fine cement. The pulp of the tooth becomes diseased and toothache follows. Tartar is a secretion made by three glands in the mouth, full of small living organisms, which assimilate matter in the saliva and deposit it on the teeth in the shape of phosphate of lime.

Living Mummies.

Living mummies exist in Tibet, near Gyangtse, at a spot the name of which in English may be rendered as "the Cave of Happy Misery." There are about twenty small caves in the solid rock, each built up in front with stones and mortar. They have padlocked doors, tiny drains and small holes just sufficient for a man to pass his hand through. In these cells men are buried for life with the idea of thus "attaining merit." Once interned they are, in extreme cases, never seen again by mortal eye. Even the hand which they stretch forth from the small hole for their daily dole of food is covered by a glove. They speak to no one and no one speaks to them. Even their death is only made known when they fail for several days to stretch out the hand for food.

Persian Way of Eating Watermelon.

"The ordinary Persian bill of fare sounds something like the banquets described in fairy tales," said a man who has spent some time in the orient. "While traveling in that country I found that the best overture to a wayside repast is a watermelon, not cut in slices, as is done in this country, but eaten like an egg, one end being cut off and the contents eaten with a wooden spoon, the roseate fluid trickling all the time to the bottom and affording a fragrant drink when the first course is over."

The Potato.

The potato is one of the most valuable plants we have. Besides being one of the most necessary articles of food, it has a variety of other uses. A great quantity of the starch used in our laundries is made from it, and after the starch has all been separated from the pulp what is left is used in the manufacture of boxes. From the stems and leaves of the plant a fluid that produces sleep is made. In many places bread, cake and puddings are made of potato flour.

LIKE AN UNBLAZED TRAIL.

Soon after the late Gilman Marston, of New Hampshire, had been admitted to the bar a civil suit was brought to him. It involved a somewhat complicated question of inheritance, says the Boston Herald. But the young man, in no way daunted, took the case, looked up authorities all the way back to Julius Caesar, and prepared an argument of a few hundred pages which seemed to him unanswerable. His only fear was that it might be beyond the comprehension of the court.

When his case was called Mr. Marston rose with inward assurance and plunged in boldly. The judge seemed interested and he took heart. But at the end of an hour and a half, in the midst of the most intricate part of his plea, he was pained to see what looked like a lack of attention on the part of the court.

It was as he had feared; the judge was unable to appreciate the nice points of his argument.

"Your honor," he said, "I beg your pardon, but do you follow me?"

"I have so far," answered the judge, shifting wearily about in his chair, "but I'll say frankly that if I thought I could find my way back, I'd quit right here."

ALTOGETHER TOO TRUSTFUL

Hemery, the winner of the Vanderbilt cup, was condoled with on the destruction of his superb car, relates the New York Tribune.

"I was too trustful," said the young Frenchman, with a rueful smile. "I let the people crowd around me, trusting them implicitly, never thinking that anyone would be so careless as to throw lighted matches about, and hence—pouf—my car went up in a mass of flames."

He lighted a cigarette. He sipped his coffee.

"To be too trustful," said Hemery, "is a fault of the French people.

"A stranger once visited a merchant of Marseilles with a letter of introduction from Alexander Dumas. It was a glowing letter. The merchant welcomed the stranger warmly, and entertained him with great hospitality for three weeks.

"Then in the night the guest disappeared, taking with him his host's best horse, and a quantity of silver plate.

"The merchant, on his next visit to Paris, sought out Dumas.

"'A pretty guest you sent me,' he said, bitterly. 'The fellow decamped with my best horse and plate worth 5,000 francs.'

"'What!' cried Dumas, horror stricken. 'Did he steal from you, too?'"

He Doesn't Curse Now.

Washington, Kans., Dec. 25 (Special).—Jesse E. Mitchell is a telephone lineman, and also a well-known resident here. Everybody acquainted with Mr. Mitchell knows that he was a man who held very positive views about Patent Medicine. Hear what he says now:

"I used to curse all kinds of Patent Medicines, for they never did me any good, but Dodd's Kidney Pills have caused me to change my mind. For twelve years I suffered from Kidney Trouble. There was a hurting across my back that made it positive agony to stoop, and as I am in a stooping position nearly all day, you can imagine how I suffered. After a day's work that any man would think nothing of, I would be tired and worn out. In fact, I was always tired. I began using Dodd's Kidney Pills and after taking four boxes I feel like a new man, I am as fresh at night as when I begin work in the morning. I have no pain in my back now, and I am stronger than ever."

Nervous Women

Their Sufferings Are Usually Due to Uterine Disorders Perhaps Unsuspected

A MEDICINE THAT CURES

Mrs M.E. Shotwell

Can we dispute the well-known fact that American women are nervous?

How often do we hear the expression, "I am so nervous, it seems as if I should fly;" or, "Don't speak to me." Little things annoy you and make you irritable; you can't sleep, you are unable to quietly and calmly perform your daily tasks or care for your children.

The relation of the nerves and generative organs in women is so close that nine-tenths of the nervous prostration, nervous debility, the blues, sleeplessness and nervous irritability arise from some derangement of the organism which makes her a woman. Fits of depression or restlessness and irritability. Spirits easily affected, so that one minute she laughs, the next minute weeps. Pain in the ovaries and between the shoulders. Loss of voice; nervous dyspepsia. A tendency to cry at the least provocation. All this points to nervous prostration.

Nothing will relieve this distressing condition and prevent months of prostration and suffering so surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. M. E. Shotwell, of 103 Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

"I cannot express the wonderful relief I have experienced by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I suffered for a long time with nervous prostration, backache, headache, loss of appetite. I could not sleep and would walk the floor almost every night.

"I had three doctors and got no better, and life was a burden. I was advised to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has worked wonders for me.

"I am a well woman, my nervousness is all gone and my friends say I look ten years younger."

Will not the volumes of letters from women made strong by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound convince all women of its virtues? Surely you cannot wish to remain sick and weak and discouraged, exhausted each day, when you can be as easily cured as other women.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Decision Affirmed.

Washington.—In an opinion by Justice Holmes, the supreme court of the United States upheld the validity of the Minnesota state law holding railroad companies responsible for injuries done to employees through the carelessness of other employees.

The case was that of the Minnesota Iron company vs. Mark M. Kline. Kline was the engineer of a train on a road in St. Louis county, owned by the iron company and was injured through the failure of a brakeman to set a switch. The jury in the trial court brought in a verdict for $5,000.

The court, however, took the case into its own hands, and ordered that the state law awarding damages to the servants of corporations because of carelessness on the part of their fellow-servants was unconstitutional. The state supreme court reverses this finding and ordered that the verdict of the jury be carried into effect. That decision was affirmed.

The Governor's Cup.

Money Creek.—H. A. Goetch, wins the governor's cup in the twelve months' educational butter scoring contest, which has been conducted under the auspices of the state dairy and food department. His average score of the twelve months was 95.71. The is a beautiful engraved silver cup which Governor Johnson offered last winter to the buttermakers of Minneso who would get the highest average score in a twelve months' contest.

Four additional cups were offered by the department to the four getting the next hightest averages. Edwin Hed of Nicolett wins the best one of the four cups with an average score of 95.69, which is only 2-100 of 1 per cent below the average of the winner. The winners of the three remaining cups in order are: H. J. Rosenau, Meriden, 95.58; C. W. Sly, Lake Crystal, 95.31; A. G. Schandel, Elmore, 95.16.

Reunited.

Duluth.—After being separated for three years, Olaf Rikola and his wife, whose parents, named Sabbats, live in Chicago, were reunited, when the young wife arrived from Chicago.

The couple came originally from the Tyrolese mountains, where they were married against the wishes of the girl's parents. The bride was stolen from her parents' home by her bethrothed, but immediately after the marriage ceremony she was recovered by her father, who moved to America, where all trace of the bride was lost by the Rikola followed and two years later he went to America, going to Pittsburg. It was there he first received word of the whereabouts of his bride who had been kept secreted with her parents in Chicago. He communicated with his wife, who had meantime attained legal age, sent her money and she left her parents home and came North.

High Water.

Crookston.—How to take care of the spring freshets in the Red River valley, carry off the surpluss of water during the closed season of the Red Lake of the Red River of the North is a problem which confronts drainage engineers of northern Minnesota and North Dakota at this time and promises to become a very serious question.

The fact that the Red Lake river and Red River of the North do not open up clear of ice for the free passage of the vast accumulations of spring water until after serious floods and enormous damage to the entire farming community along their banks has been done, makes the question of handling spring freshet and thaw water a most serious one, particularly at this time when there is so much ditch work just completed and so much in prospect for another year.

Dead Mail.

Minneapolis.—The annual report on mail matter sent to the dead letter office from the local postoffice tells an interesting story of the letter that never came.

In one year 118,061 pieces of mail matter have been declared "nixies" and sent to the dead letter office or returned to the sender for more postage or a corrected address. The following figures show the various defects and the way the matter is handled and disposed of: Returned to the sender, 86,380 pieces; address corrected and forwarded, 15,774; wrong address, 106; insufficient address, 1772; illegible, 159; held for postage, 13,180; Canadian letters incorrectly addressed, 90.

News Notes.

Minneapolis—George Brown's clever attempt to get two sealskin jackets from a department store was foiled by the police and Brown is locked up on a charge of fogery.

Minneapolis—Oscar Carlson, boarding at 1041 Edgerton street, was blown almost to atoms by a charge of dynamite, while excavating at South Wabasha and Congress streets. His head, ears, fingers and one arm were picked up nearly a block from the scene of the accident and the trunk of the trunk of the body was found forty feet away.

Lester Prairie—The Milbraith family is one of the oldest of this section of the state and is the only one with four generation now living in this town.

Winona—Louis Schultz, a workman forty-two years of age, fell from a gas tank on which he was hammering rivets to instant death.

Duluth—The name of the Duluth, Virginia and & Rainy Lake road has been changed to the "Duluth, Rainy Lake & Winnipeg Railroad company." Amended articles have been filed to the foregoing effect, and their is a fine field for speculation in the action of the company.

THE TURMOIL IN RUSSIA.

New horrors mark the battle between the troops and the insurgents in Moscow. The chief of police was taken from his home by 300 men and slain, and it is reported that Gen. Mistchenko is wounded.

Fighting between the troops and the strikers in the streets of Moscow continued for two days and the slaughter is great. Machine guns mowed down the mobs at the barricades and many innocent persons fell victims to the soldiers. The slaughter in Moscow caused the uprising to spread to other cities, where the apathy of the police and the troops caused a panic among the people.

Five thousand persons have been killed and 14,000 wounded in fights in Moscow between revolutionists and Cossacks. Leaders of the Russian revolutionists assert armed forces are being assembled to fight the soldiers and that civil war between organized bodies of troops will begin soon.

Over 2,500 lives were lost and $20,000,000 worth of property destroyed during the recent Vladivostok riots.

The czar in acknowledging Emperor William's recent telegram of good wishes admits the country is having a perilous experience, but hopes for favorable result.

Gov. Gen. Doubarsoff, reporting on the Moscow uprising, places the number of dead and injured at 15,000.

Gov. Gen. Doubasoff, of Moscow, reports to the czar that he has the situation in hand and is able to put down the rebellion.

The revolution in Poland is declared to be ready for an armed conflict with the czar. Fighting at Moscow continues. News from the provinces is alarming. The general strike spreads.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The British bark Pass of Melfort, Capt. Congal, from Ancon, for Puget Sound, drove ashore on the rocks of Vancouver island, a quarter of a mile east of Amphitrite Point, and all on board, 27 in number, were lost.

The officers of the Cleveland Retail Coal Dealers, association indicted on the charge of violating the Valentine anti-trust law pleaded guilty in common pleas court in Cincinnati and were sentenced to pay fines of $500 each.

Indignant at continued criticism of the signing of the peace treaty with the United States, former Premier Montero Rios has quit Spanish public life.

A German paper says that negotiations for a commercial treaty with the United States are proceeeding satisfactorily.

The loyalist council of the Cumberland Presbyterian church will receive a $40,000 fund to fight Presbyterian unity.

A diplomatic adviser in Korea in a letter received in this country denies that Korea was forced to sign a pact with Japan, and declares that recent reports published throughout the world were unfounded.

Neighbors of Mrs. Concetta Rizz, who burned herself to death in Chicago, assert that the woman was made insane through worshiping the sun.

Secretary Shaw declares John R. Walsh did not take a penny from his banks dishonestly and will not be prosecuted.

Daniel E. Storms, secretary of state of Indiana, has retained counsel and will contest the demand of the governor for his resignation on the ground that he had not violated the law.

Low pay for post office clerks greatly handicaps the service, according to a report made by First Assistant Postmaster General Hitchcock.

An enormous increase is shown in shipping at Sault Ste. Marie, a total of 21,679 vessels passing through the canal in 1905.

The sixth universal postal congress is to meet at Rome, Italy, next April.

Representatives of western railroads agreed to cooperate with the interstate commerce commission to abolish rebates.

At least 80,000 Chicagoans naturalized illegally by the criminal court, have no right to vote, according to an interpretation of the law by the Civic federation.

Viscount Siuzo Aoki has been appointed Japan's ambasasdor to this country.

John Alexander Dowie of Zion City, Ill., arrived at Port Antonio, Jamaica, on the steamer Admiral Dewey. He was confined to his cabin during the voyage, but his health is somewhat improved.

Christmas was a jolly day at the White House, the cares of state being put aside for Yuletide festivities, including a tree for the children and a family dinner in the evening, at which Congressman Longworth was present.

Charitable and religious organizations of New York gave Christmas dinners to thousands of the poor and friendless.

Jack O'Brien, the pugilist, who recently defeated Robert Fitzsimmons, authorized the issuance of a challenge to James J. Jeffries, the retired heavyweight champion. Any terms that Jeffries may demand, he says, will be accepted.

COUNTRY QUIETS DOWN

THE SMOKE OF BATTLE FAST CLEARING AWAY.

Czar's Government Now Believes the Revolutionists Are Crushed.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 30.—The suppression of the insurrection at Moscow and the certainty that similar uprisings elsewhere will be crushed, mark the collapse of the first attempt of the "reds" to overthrow the government arms and administers a defeat from which, it is not believed in government circles, the revolutionaries can quickly recover.

Now that the smoke of battle is clearing away, the hopelessness of the conflict seems apparent. The populace held aloof and not a single military unit actually joined the revolutionaries.

The country has quieted down and the cabinet now hopes that the selections to the douma are assured and that the government can devote its time to the suppression of the revolt in the Baltic provinces, and more especially to the solution of the Agrarian question.

Peter Struve, editor of the Osvobojdenie (emancipation) who has again shifted his position, published a ringing article yesterday afternoon in which he admits that the defeat of the attempt aimed at the overthrow of the government was a good thing. He says the attempt of course was madness and was bound to be extinguished in blood. Nevertheless he alleges there was a heroic spirit behind it, which should terrify the government.

"Another such victory and the government is lost," says M. Strove, who, in conclusion, summons all the forces of emancipation to bury their dissensions and to unite in a final struggle.

The report that Lieut. Gen. Mistchenko was wounded is not true.

The League of Leagues has split, one portion favoring a continuance of the strike and another abandonment of violent tactics and co-operation in peaceful preparation for the work of the douma.

DEATH IN FIRE.

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 30.—Mrs. Loraine Buckless, aged sixty-nine, was burned to death, two persons injured, twenty-seven families driven from their homes and several small stores were put out of business, by flames which gutted the Higgins block, 817-29 Minnehaha avenue, at 4:30 Friday morning.

The flames started in the apartments of Mrs. Buckless, when Mrs. Mary Foley arose and lighted a kerosene heater to take the chill off the room

The stove exploded and burning oil was scattered about the room. After trying vainly to save Mrs. Buckless, Mrs. Foley ran for Steve Lewis, a barber, who slept on the same floor.

The three Swartz children refused to to leave their apartments. Wells had to exert force with them. When carrying one he fell and broke his arm. He took the child up in the other arm and carried it to safety and did not cease his efforts until the block was cleared.

Charles Bates, in an effort to enter the rooms where the old lady was imprisoned' was badly burned about the face and hands and inhaled hot smoke.

Woman Held Up.

Austin, Minn., Dec. 30.—When walking home Thursday night, after having called at the home of friends, Mrs. Granville Kearn, aged 65, a well known resident of Austin, was suddenly attacked by a holdup man. She was knocked down and her purse containing considerable money was taken by the thug, who fled without leaving any clew to his identity.

Mrs. Kearn's head was severely gashed by her fall and the shock of the encounter, in view of her advanced age, may have serious results.

Got Small Amount.

Hammond, Wis., Dec. 30.—Burglars entered the depot here, blew open the safe took one book of American Express limited checks and 23 cents. There was considerable damage done to office furniture. Entrance was gained through a back window. There is no clue.

Paine Arrested.

Appleton, Wis., Dec. 31.—George Paine was arrested here charged with stealing a $50 silk American flag from the county courthouse at Ashland, Wis., last May. He has been taken to Antigo, Wis., for trial.

Joke Was Fatal.

Notre Dame, Ind., Dec. 30.—Claude A. Bagby of Durango, Colo., 20 years old, was almost instantly killed last night as the result of a practical joke by students. They had planned a mimic holdup of a friend.

The victim pulled a revolver and fired fatal shot.

WASHINGTON LETTER

ECCENTRIC CHARACTERS IN HALLS OF CONGRESS.

DR. MARY WALKER A FIGURE

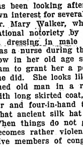
WASHINGTON.—The opening of congress attracts cranks from all over the country as the flame of the candle attracts moths. There are a number of these eccentric geniuses with all sorts of schemes they hope to impress upon congress, who throng the halls about the capitol, but they are all of a mild type, as the police watch carefully that no one of a dangerous character gets inside the big building.

There is one human prodigy who has been about the capitol for several congresses who is known to the guides and employes as "the Elixir of Life Man." He is a venerable specimen, and carries about with him bottles of a queer-looking, reddish mixture which he claims, if properly used, will prolong life. He also asserts that this same preparation will "cause bursts of oratory and return of youth and will produce a winning personality." This old fellow became so persistent in annoying senators last congress that he was put out of the capitol. He is back again this year, however, and so long as he does not annoy anyone he will not be interfered with.

Some of the eccentric characters met with in the corridors are women. One of these is a national character, and has been looking after a bill in her own interest for several years. This is Dr. Mary Walker, who has achieved national notoriety by her persistency in dressing in male garments. She was a nurse during the civil war and now in her old age she wants Uncle Sam to grant her a pension for what she did. She looks like a little weazened old man in a rusty black suit with long skirted coat, a standing collar and four-in-hand tie and a somewhat ancient silk hat on her head. When things do not go her way she becomes rather violent and is apt to give members of congress a piece of her mind.

The "Little Statue Man."



SOME of the political cranks have crossed the "Great Divide" since congress last met. Among these was an interesting oldtimer who was known as "the little statue man." For years he was a conspicuous figure on the opening day of congress. He hailed from New Jersey and had been a regular visitor at the capitol since soon after the civil war, in which he served as a sailor.

The old guides about the capitol gave this queer character the sobriquet of "the little statue man" because of his habit of frequenting Statuary hall and talking loud and earnestly to the bronze and marble statues there. He was small in stature himself, but as full of energy as a live electric wire. His favorite statue was that of Robert Fulton, the inventor of the steamboat, who is represented as holding in his hand a model of his first steamboat, on which his gaze has been intently fixed. The "little statue man" would approach the stone Fulton reverently, hat in hand, and begin talking to the statue like this:

"Ah, good morning, Robert. Still busy perfecting your little steamer, I see. But, Robert, you had better hurry your scheme along, or I will beat you, for I am thinking about inventing a ship that will both fly through the air or skim over the waters."

This little Jerseyman was also very fond of the plaster statue of Gen. Washington, which stands in Statuary hall, and which he always familiarly addressed as "George." He believed that this statue still breathes the spirit of '76, or, as the little man expressed it: "George Washington, in plaster, has been reincarnated with the patriotism of the late George Washington in the flesh and stands in this hall as a living inspiration to the American people."

Another peculiar character who is missing was a tall strapping individual known as "the Irish Mexican." His real name was Murphy, but he had given it a Mexican twist by contorting it into "Murphreerero." He could talk Spanish fluently, but with an Irish accent. He had an imaginary claim against Uncle Sam.

Senator Perkins, of California.

SENATOR PERKINS, of California, is one of the richest men in the upper house of congress. He started at the foot of the ladder, however, and when only 15 shipped on board a sailing vessel for New Orleans and followed that calling for a number of years. He shipped "before the mast" on a sailing vessel bound for San Francisco in 1855. On arriving there he engaged in merchandizing and is now a multi-millionaire. He is a good politician and has a knack of remembering names. This faculty is a source of envy to some of his colleagues. The other day he met at the door of the white house a man whom he had not seen for 12 years.

"How do you do, Stone," the senator said. "You are looking better than you did the last time I saw you."

"Well, how on earth do you remember me!" cried the man. "I don't believe that you ever met me more than two or three times in your life anyway."

"Oh, it's an easy thing to remember a name or a place," replied the senator, "that is, if only you have a system. I have one but I cannot just explain how it works. It is by association, of course, as all system of memory training must be. I began studying the matter a good many years ago, and I suppose I could now sit down and name a thousand men in California and give the town and street number where each lives."

The senator then related how he had puzzled a clairvoyant once by having the latter write down the names of a hundred men which the senator gave him, and then betting him $10 after the list had been folded up and he had been turned around several times that he could reverse the names without making a single mistake. He won the bet, simply because he had given the names of men living on a street that he knew and by beginning at the other end of the street he could reverse them in order very readily.

THE baby member of the United States senate, or the "kid," as they call him in the house, is Senator Elmer J. Burkett, of Nebraska. He is but 37 years of age, and in his life exemplifies the great possibilities that lie before every American boy. He was a farmer lad, and at the age of ten years was following the plow. This was not so difficult an operation on the prairies as it might have been among the rocks and stumps of the New England hills, but it was a pretty strenuous life for a youngster of that age. At the age of 17 he was a student in an Iowa college, where he graduated at 20. He studied law and soon went to practice and by the time he reached the age of 30 he was a member of the house of representatives.

Mr. Burkett had as an opponent in his race for the senate no less a distinguished character than William Jennings Bryan. The latter had the united support of the democrats, populists and free silver republicans. There was a red-hot fight for the election of members of the legislature, and Bryan took advantage of every mistake the republicans had made since they had regained control of Nebraska, and spoke in every district in the state. His fight was unavailing, however, and Mr. Burkett found at the end of the campaign of 1904 that he had a majority of the legislature with him.

Elmer Burkett, as he is familiarly known among his old friends of the house, was one of Speaker Cannon's "boys." He served six years in the house and four of these as a member of the great appropriations committee, where "Uncle Joe" had immediate charge of him. The training he had received under that veteran statesman was a good one, and had not the Nebraska legislature sent him to the senate, the chances are that he would have succeeded Mr. Hemenway as chairman of the big money committee of the house.

Always Mercenary.

"Why are people so eager for fame?"

Matter of Prayer.

"I shall miss you while you are on your hunting trip, dear," murmured the young wife, affectionately. "And I shall pray that the men you are going with will do the same!"

THE TURMOIL IN RUSSIA.

New horrors mark the battle between the troops and the insurgents in Moscow. The chief of police was taken from his home by 300 men and slain, and it is reported that Gen. Mistchenko is wounded.

Fighting between the troops and the strikers in the streets of Moscow continued for two days and the slaughter is great. Machine guns mowed down the mobs at the barricades and many innocent persons fell victims to the soldiers. The slaughter in Moscow caused the uprising to spread to other cities, where the apathy of the police and the troops caused a panic among the people.

Five thousand persons have been killed and 14,000 wounded in fights in Moscow between revolutionists and Cossacks. Leaders of the Russian revolutionists assert armed forces are being assembled to fight the soldiers and that civil war between organized bodies of troops will begin soon.

Over 2,500 lives were lost and $20,000,000 worth of property destroyed during the recent Vladivostok riots.

The czar in acknowledging Emperor William's recent telegram of good wishes admits the country is having a perilous experience, but hopes for favorable result.

Gov. Gen. Doubarsoff, reporting on the Moscow uprising, places the number of dead and injured at 15,000.

Gov. Gen. Doubasoff, of Moscow, reports to the czar that he has the situation in hand and is able to put down the rebellion.

The revolution in Poland is declared to be ready for an armed conflict with the czar. Fighting at Moscow continues. News from the provinces is alarming. The general strike spreads.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The British bark Pass of Melfort, Capt. Congal, from Ancon, for Puget Sound, drove ashore on the rocks of Vancouver island, a quarter of a mile east of Ampitrite Point, and all on board, 27 in number, were lost.

Christmas was a jolly day at the White House, the cares of state being put aside for Yuletide festivities, including a tree for the children and a family dinner in the evening, at which Congressman Longworth was present.

Charitable and religious organizations of New York gave Christmas dinners to thousands of the poor and friendless.

Jack O'Brien, the pugilist, who recently defeated Robert Fitzsimmons, authorized the issuance of a challenge to James J. Jeffries, the retired heavyweight champion. Any terms that Jeffries may demand, he says, will be accepted.

COUNTRY QUIETS DOWN

THE SMOKE OF BATTLE FAST CLEARING AWAY.

Czar's Government Now Believes the Revolutionists Are Crushed.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 30.—The suppression of the insurrection at Moscow and the certainty that similar uprisings elsewhere will be crushed, mark the collapse of the first attempt of the "reds" to overthrow the government arms and administers a defeat from which, it is not believed in government circles, the revolutionaries can quickly recover.

Now that the smoke of battle is clearing away, the hopelessness of the conflict seems apparent. The populace held aloof and not a single military unit actually joined the revolutionaries.

The country has quieted down and the cabinet now hopes that the selections to the douma are assured and that the government can devote its time to the suppression of the revolt in the Baltic provinces, and more especially to the solution of the Agrarian question.

Peter Struve, editor of the Osvobojdenie (emancipation) who has again shifted his position, published a ringing article yesterday afternoon in which he admits that the defeat of the attempt aimed at the overthrow of the government was a good thing. He says the attempt of course was madness and was bound to be extinguished in blood. Nevertheless, he alleges there was a heroic spirit behind it, which should terrify the government.

"Another such victory and the government is lost," says M. Strove, who, in conclusion, summons all the forces of emancipation to bury their dissentions and to unite in a final struggle.

The report that Lieut. Gen. Mistchenko was wounded is not true.

The League of Leagues has split, one portion favoring a continuance of the strike and another abandonment of violent tactics and co-operation in peaceful preparation for the work of the douma.

DEATH IN FIRE.

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 30.—Mrs. Loraine Buckless, aged sixty-nine, was burned to death, two persons injured, twenty-seven families driven from their homes and several small stores were put out of business, by flames which gutted the Higgins block, 817-29 Minnehaha avenue, at 4:30 Friday morning.

The flames started in the apartments of Mrs. Buckless, when Mrs. Mary Foley arose and lighted a kerosene heater to take the chill off the room.

The stove exploded and burning oil was scattered about the room. After trying vainly to save Mrs. Buckless, Mrs. Foley ran for Steve Lewis, a barber, who slept in the same floor.

The three Swartz children refused to to leave their apartments. Wells had to exert force with them. When carrying one he fell and broke his arm. He took the child up in the other arm and carried it to safety and did not cease his efforts until the block was cleared.

Charles Bates, in an effort to enter the rooms where the old lady was imprisoned was badly burned about the face and hands and inhaled hot smoke.

Woman Held Up.

Austin, Minn., Dec. 30.—When walking home Thursday night, after having called at the home of friends, Mrs. Granville Kearn, aged 65, a well known resident of Austin, was suddenly attacked by a holdup man. She was knocked down and her purse containing considerable money was taken by the thug, who fled without leaving any clew to his identity.

Mrs. Kearn's head was severely gashed by her fall and the shock of the encounter, in view of her advanced age, may have serious results.

Got Small Amount.

Hammond, Wis., Dec. 31.—Burglars entered the depot here, blew open the safe took one book of American Express limited checks and 23 cents. There was considerable damage done to office furniture. Entrance was gained through a back window. There is no clue.

Paine Arrested.

Appleton, Wis., Dec. 31.—George Paine was arrested here charged with stealing a $50 silk American flag from the county courthouse at Ashland, Wis., last May. He has been taken to Antigo, Wis., for trial.

Joke Was Fatal.

Notre Dame, Ind., Dec. 30.—Claude A. Bagby of Durango, Colo., 20 years old, was almost instantly killed last night as the result of a practical joke by students. They had planned a mimic holdup of a friend.

The victim pulled a revolver and fired fatal shot.

WASHINGTON LETTER

ECCENTRIC CHARACTERS IN HALLS OF CONGRESS.

DR. MARY WALKER A FIGURE

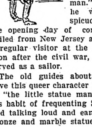
WASHINGTON.—The opening of congress attracts cranks from all over the country as the flame of the candle attracts moths. There are a number of these eccentric geniuses with all sorts of schemes they hope to impress upon congress, who throng the halls about the capitol, but they are all of a mild type, as the police watch carefully that no one of a dangerous character gets inside the big building.

There is one human prodigy who has been about the capitol for several congresses who is known to the guides and employes as "the Elixir of Life Man." He is a venerable specimen, and carries about with him bottles of a queer-looking, reddish mixture which he claims, if properly used, will prolong life. He also asserts that this same preparation will "cause bursts of oratory and return of youth and will produce a winning personality." This old fellow became so persistent in annoying senators last congress that he was put out of the capitol. He is back again this year, however, and so long as he does not annoy anyone he will not be interfered with.

Some of the eccentric characters met with in the corridors are women. One of these is a national character, and has been looking after a bill in her own interest for several years. This is Dr. Mary Walker, who has achieved national notoriety by her persistency in dressing in male garments. She was a nurse during the civil war and now in her old age she wants Uncle Sam to grant her a pension for what she did. She looks like a little weazened old man in a rusty black suit with long skirted coat, a standing collar and four-in-hand tie and a somewhat ancient silk hat on her head. When things do not go her way she becomes rather violent and is apt to give members of congress a piece of her mind.

The "Little Statue Man."



SOME of the political cranks have crossed the "Great Divide" since congress last met. Among these was an interesting old-timer who was known as "the little statue man." For years he was a conspicuous figure on the opening day of congress. He hailed from New Jersey and had been a regular visitor at the capitol since soon after the civil war, in which he served as a sailor.

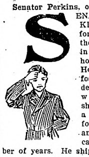
The old guides about the capitol gave this queer character the sobriquet of "the little statue man" because of his habit of frequenting Statuary hall and talking loud and earnestly to the bronze and marble statues there. He was small in stature himself, but as full of energy as a live electric wire. His favorite statue was that of Robert Fulton, the inventor of the steamboat, who is represented as holding in his hand a model of his first steamboat, on which his gaze has been intently fixed. The "little statue man" would approach the stone Fulton reverently, hat in hand, and begin talking to the statue like this:

"Ah, good morning, Robert. Still busy perfecting your little steamer, I see. But, Robert, you had better hurry your scheme along, or I will beat you, for I am thinking about inventing a ship that will both fly through the air or skim over the waters."

This little Jerseyman was also very fond of the plaster statue of Gen. Washington, which stands in Statuary hall, and which he always familiarly addressed as "George." He believed that this statue still breathes the spirit of '76, or, as the little man expressed it: "George Washington, in plaster, has been reincarnated with the patriotism of the late George Washington in the flesh and stands in this hall as a living inspiration to the American people."

Another peculiar character who is missing was a tall strapping individual known as "the Irish Mexican." His real name was Murphy, but he had given it a Mexican twist by contorting it into "Murphreerero." He could talk Spanish fluently, but with an Irish accent. He had an imaginary claim against Uncle Sam.

Senator Perkins, of California.



SENATOR PERKINS, of California, is one of the richest men in the upper house of congress. He started at the foot of the ladder, however, and when only 13 shipped on board a sailing vessel for New Orleans and followed that calling for a number of years. He shipped "before the mast" on a sailing vessel bound for San Francisco in 1855. On arriving there he engaged in merchandizing and is now a multi-millionaire. He is a good politician and has a knack of remembering names. This faculty is a source of envy to some of his colleagues. The other day he met at the door of the white house a man whom he had not seen for 12 years.

"How do you do, Stone," the senator said. "You are looking better than you did the last time I saw you."

"Well, how on earth do you remember me!" cried the man. "I don't believe that you ever met me more than two or three times in your life anyway."

"Oh, it's an easy thing to remember a name or a place," replied the senator, "that is, if only you have a system. I have one but I cannot just explain how it works. It is by association, of course, as all system of memory training must be. I began studying the matter a good many years ago, and I suppose I could now sit down and name a thousand men in California and give the town and street number where each lives."

The senator then related how he had puzzled a clairvoyant once by having the latter write down the names of a hundred men which the senator gave him, and then betting him $10 after the list had been folded up and he had been turned around several times that he could reverse the names without making a single mistake. He won the bet simply because he had given the names of men living on a street that he knew and by beginning at the other end of the street he could reverse them in order very readily.

THE baby member of the United States senate, or the "kid," as they call him in the house, is Senator Elmer J. Burkett, of Nebraska. He is but 37 years of age, and in his life exemplifies the great possibilities that lie before every American boy. He was a farmer lad, and at the age of ten years was following the plow. This was not so difficult an operation on the prairies as it might have been among the rocks and stumps of the New England hills, but it was a pretty strenuous life for a youngster of that age. At the age of 17 he was a student in an Iowa college, where he graduated at 20. He studied law and soon went to practice and by the time he reached the age of 30 he was a member of the house of representatives.

Mr. Burkett had as an opponent in his race for the senate no less a distinguished character than William Jennings Bryan. The latter had the united support of the democrats, populists and free silver republicans. There was a red-hot fight for the election of members of the legislature, and Bryan took advantage of every mistake the republicans had made since they had regained control of Nebraska, and spoke in every district in the state. His fight was unavailing, however, and Mr. Burkett found at the end of the campaign of 1904 that he had a majority of the legislature with him.

Elmer Burkett, as he is familiarly known among his old friends of the house, was one of Speaker Cannon's "boys." He served six years in the house and four of these as a member of the great appropriations committee, where "Uncle Joe" had immediate charge of him. The training he had received under that veteran statesman was a good one, and had not the Nebraska legislature sent him to the senate, the chances are that he would have succeeded Mr. Hemenway as chairman of the big money committee of the house.

Always Mercenary.

"Why are people so eager for fame?"

Matter of Prayer.

"I shall miss you while you are on your hunting trip, dear," murmured the young wife, affectionately. "And I shall pray that the men you are going with will do the same!"

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

How many times have you written it 1905?

How about them new years resolutions? Are you still keeping them?

The czar has been ordered to leave Russia. He should come to northern Minnesota and take up a homestead, but he might be attacted by "the bloody trio",if he came up this way.

There is silence among the trio that could only be equaled by that of a chicken thief that you caught red handed in your coop at midnight. He naturally would have nothing to say.

It will now be up to the Crookston papers to protest against them Thief River Falls papers doing legal work, because they have not got as good a printing plants as they have in the city of Crookston.

Look out for Jacobson, the statesman from Lac quiParle county. He is reciveing more complimentary press notices than all of the other proposed gubernatorial candidates put together. If Jacobson were nominated it would make it exceedingly interesting for Gov. Johnson. They could never accuse him of being friendly to trusts or to large corporations.—Fooley Independent.

Nor to state drainage.

Red Lake Falls Gazette: The board of commissioners of Polk county are dissatisfied with the rates made by the Murpy light trust at that place and unless they can get a substantial reduction in the rate will put in an olectrict light plant in the Polk county court house. Polk county has a bunch of officers that have things to suit or take bull by the horns and make them suit, and their work should be warml approved by the general public.

We wish all our large family of readers, a happy, prosperous year in 1906. As for ourselves we are quite well, thank you. We ran on to a queer gang of editors when we moved up here from old Polk, but they may be all right, after a little polish is put on them. The trouble seems to be with them is that they have been petted to much by having the othe fellow say "ouch"please don't, when they hit him with a chunk of mud

W. J. Murphy. of the Minneapolis Tribune, is out with a circular letter "touching" the editors of northern Minnesota for $2.50 per year to exchang with them. He has it figured out that the annual cost of an exchange to him is $4.19, but that he is willing to loose $1.19, on evry one in order that the editors may receive his paper. Thanks, but we think this sacrifice on the part of Mr.Murphy is unnecessary,for with two such live newspapers as the Duluth News Tribune,and Herald, before us daily we will try and get along with out The Tribune, and allow Mr. Mrphy to keep his $1.19, for he may need it when he is old. The time is nerely passed that Minneapolis can boast of being the whole thing, in northern Minnesota, and with the Soo line completed direct to Duluth,they will occupy about the same position as Chicago, so far as the northern part of the state is concerned,

Cheerful and Hopeful.

The men whom I have seen succeed best in life says Charles Kingsley, have always been cheerful and hopeful men, who went about their business with a smile on their faces and took the changes and chances of their normal life like men, facing rough and smooth alike as it came, and so found the truth of the old proverb that "good times and bad times and all times pass over."

Legal Eloquence.

A young lawyer concluded his argument in a case with the following sublime burst of eloquence: "If, gentlemen of the jury, the defendant's hogs are permitted to roam at large over the fair fields of my client with impunity, then—yes, then, indeed, have our forefathers fought and bled and died in vain!"

Logic.

Teddie—Pa, where do we get our milk from? Father—From cows, my son. Teddie—And where do cows get their milk from? Father—Why, Teddie, where do you get your tears? Teddie (after a long, thoughtful pause)—Do they have to spank cows, papa?—Judge

The Kaiser's Stirrup Cup.

Here is the recipe, given in the Westminster Gazette, of the kaiser's favorite preparation when he goes out hunting:

White beer, sugar, citron peel, ginger, spices, the yolk of at least a dozen eggs, Rhine wine, Madeira, old Santa Cruz rum. All this after being thoroughly stirred is placed on a fire and slowly heated, several large pats of butter being added to the concoction while it is warm.

Our greatest glory is not in never falling, but in rising every time we fall.—Pascal.

Knew the Crowd.

A street preacher in a west of Scotland town called a policeman who was passing and complained about being annoyed by a certain section of the audience and asked him to remove the objectionable ones.

"Weel, ye see," replied the cautious officer. "It would be a hard job for me tae spot them, but I'll tell ye what I'd dae if I were you."

"What would you do?" eagerly inquired the preacher.

"Just gae round wi' the hat!"

Webster's Tiresome Habit.

Senator Hoar in his "Reminiscences" says that Daniel Webster had a tiresome habit in his public speeches of groping after the most suitable word after this fashion: "Why is it, Mr. Chairman, that there has gathered, congregated, this great number of inhabitants, dwellers, here; that these roads, avenues, routes of travel, highways, converge, meet, come together here?" When the speech was printed all the synonyms but the best one would be left out

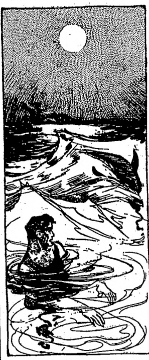
Bitten By Shark

A Daring Swimmer's Adventure In the Gulf of Mexico.

Big Fish Pursued Him, and He Escaped From Its Jaws Only After Losing Part of His Heel.

Many men have narrow escapes and live to tell of them, but few have the close call with death that William Reese encountered and come out with breath in their bodies, says the New Orleans Picayune. Reese's adventure stands out as unique. All during the summer months he worked as an engineer on a dredge boat which plied up and down the bayous emptying into the gulf of Mexico, and it was during this term of service that he met the terror and skipped it by the margin of a hair's breadth.



"I SAW THE RAVENOUS FISH DARTING TOWARD ME."

"Life on a dredge boat is not an ideal existence by any means," said the hero of the adventure, "and soon grows so monotonous that it is hardly tolerable. In fact, were it not for the few chance haps and hazards that come our way I think we would die of ennui.

"It is of one of those hazards that I want to tell you, a hazard that, as I look back upon it now, makes cold shivers play up and down my back.

"I was virtually in the jaws of a man eating shark, a great ravenous monster, seeking to appease its appetite, and here am I, alive and well.

"Our boat lay at the mouth of one of the bayous that pour their flood into the restless southern sea within a few miles of that picturesque spot, Grand Isle. We were far enough up the stream to escape the pound and rush of the great waves which throw whitecaps skyward out in that waste of greenish waters, but we could see the ocean, hear its weeping, moaning sob, and the melancholy, dirge-like sound seemed to call us and infect us with a desire for a plunge into those surges.

"I was one of those who listened to the voice of the sea, hearkened to the weird call, and the wild desire possessed me for a swim in those mighty waves. The surf washing on the beach in long, zigzagging lines of white, yeasty foam we could see from the deck of our anchored steamer, and to our ears came the swishing, pounding boom as each wall of water, urged in by a never weakening force, spent its energy in climbing the stretch of yellow sand and sprayed itself in lashing showers on the unyielding shore.

"The temptation to swim in that great sea was not to be resisted. My blood tingled at the sight and sound of it, and I obtained the captain's permission to use the yawl to row over to the island.

"'Going for a swim, Reese?' he asked, and when I gave an affirmative reply he said that the surf bathing along the beach of the island was magnificent, but that it was dangerous to go too far out because of the sharks. I'd heard the story of the sharks before, but wasn't afraid, not intending to risk myself out in very deep water, and as I shoved the skiff off from the dredge boat's side I assured the skipper that I would exercise great care.

"Two or three of the crew went with me, and, handling the oars in pairs, we rapidly crossed the stretch of calm water, sheltered between the island and the marshy mainland, and reached a favorable point to tie up.

"It was evening, a glorious summer evening, with a stiff breeze sweeping across the island from out at sea, and a mellow moon riding high in the heavens and bathing the broad expanse in shimmering, silver light, and we all as we gazed at the gulf, casting off a glistening spray that looked like countless millions of diamonds, and at the heavy line of black shadows cast by the thick groves near the beach, could not but appreciate the magnificent splendor of the scene.

"But somewhere out in that sea a monster shark was lurking that was to taste of my flesh ere the night had passed, and would I have known what the future held for me I would hardly have been in the mood to enjoy nature's beauties.

"We divested ourselves of our attire, donned bathing suits and, with a shout of delight, dashed into the surf, which rolled up the beach to meet us. We lay in the shallow water as the waves splashed over us, but finally we wandered out until the flood submerged us nearly to the chin. My companions were content with this venture, but I, being a good swimmer, was bent on a further risk, and with lusty buffets I swam against the oncoming walls of foam until I was out in the depths.

"The sport was the finest I had ever enjoyed, and I swam around all unconscious of danger until I heard the voice of one of my mates calling over the waters: 'For God's sake, Reese, come in! There's a shark moving near you.'

"I treaded water and turned to look, and a huge wave dashed into my face and blinded me for the moment. But my eyes were soon clear, and projecting halfway out of another sweep of breakers I saw the fin and a portion of the sloping back of a monster shark.

"The moon made objects as clear as day, and the blood seemed to freeze around my heart when, after the rush of billows had passed, I saw the ravenous fish darting toward me. I sprang forward in the water and madly swam toward the shore, and each wave as it overtook me hurried along my flight. I thank God for this, for had not my small body offered lesser resistance to the billows than the shark the monster must have easily overtaken me and found opportunity for a good bite with his terrible teeth.

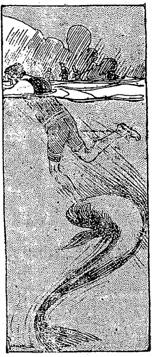
"Each moment found me closer to the shore, and once I took time to look over my shoulder. The shark was just behind me, and even as I marked his rapid motion he leaped from the water and dived beneath the flood.

"For an instant my course toward shore was stayed. Something held me by the heel, and there was a stinging, numbing pain, as though my whole foot was being crushed in an iron vise. In desperation I jerked my leg forward, and as my foot beneath the water went free a pain like an electric shock shot up my thigh and seemed to rack through my whole body.

"I knew then that the shark had snapped at me and bitten off a portion of my heel, and as I called forth all my reserve strength in the race for life there was a despair tugging at my heart, for I felt the race a hopeless one.

"It was then that I felt something brush my kicking leg, and the sense that the contact was with an object clammy and pulpy readily possessed me. The monster had made another try for me and, miscalculating, grazed me in his dash.

"A deluge of water more powerful than any I had yet encountered lifted me bodily up on its crest, and when I came down and started to swim again the points of my toes were touching sand. Another effort and my feet were firmly placed, and, running and swimming by turns, I hurried up the submerged slope.



"SOMETHING HELD ME BY THE HEEL."

"I knew then that I was safe; that the water was too shallow for the man eater to follow me, and, turning again, I looked over the whitecaps to see him. There he was, sure enough, swimming about in short circles, his black fin showing above the surface, baffled and doubtless angry at missing his supper.

"A second time he leaped from the water and dived, and then it was I was able to judge his size, and from my calculations I made him out to be at least fifteen feet long. My foot was beginning to pain me dreadfully, and when I reached the shore and joined my startled companions I could hardly walk. A good sized piece was missing from my heel, and the blood flowed freely from the wound. I was supported to the skiff and taken across the neck of quiet waters to the boat, where I received every attention.

"The wound was very painful, but not dangerous, and in a few days I was able to walk around once more with the aid of a stick.

"I will carry the mark of that shark's teeth to my grave."

THE ROAD OF ANTHRACITE

Popular Because of Its Superb Service

NO RAILROAD IN THE WORLD offers to the traveler a more picturesque route than the Lackawanna Railroad. Leaving New York the train crosses the far-famed Jersey meadows into the highlands of New Jersey. Skirting the Delaware River the journey lies directly through the Delaware Water Gap, one of the most noted scenic views in the world. Thence to the summit of the Pocono Mountains, 2,000 feet above the level of the sea, the train rushes into Scranton, beyond which another mountain range is passed before Binghamton is reached. Here the road skirts the beautiful Susquehanna River, running from there into the valley of the Chemung River and then into that of the Genesee. The entire journey lies through a continuous panorama of rippling brooks, leaping cataracts, towering mountains and hill-shadowed lakes, which for diversity of interest and beauty of landscape is not equaled anywhere on the American continent.

HUMAN INGENUITY can do no more for the protection of trains than is furnished by the signal system in operation upon the Lackawanna Railroad. Brightly painted semaphores by day and colored lights by night flash their warning to the swift-flying trains. These signals divide the line into blocks, and no train is permitted to enter them until preceding trains have passed out of way. Where diverging tracks are met, a system of interlocking switches makes the danger of accident impossible. Crossings, grades and curves are protected by the most modern equipment for the safety of trains. If for any reason this wonderful mechanism fails to work, signals are automatically set at "danger," and not a wheel moves until the trouble is ascertained.

HARD COAL IS USED exclusively on all passenger trains of the Lackawanna Railroad. This is of peculiar interest to the traveler over its line, for the 400 miles of beauty lying between New York and Buffalo may be viewed through open windows, without danger from flying cinders or annoying smoke. The roadbed being rock-ballasted, there is no dust, and the comforts of the journey are further assured by superb Pullman cars and high-backed airy coaches.

"ORDER WHAT YOU WANT; pay only for what you order," is the apt phrase which describes the dining-car system on the Lackawanna Railroad. Meals are a la carte, which means that the traveler who does not care to order an elaborate repast may make individual selection from the menu. The cars are stocked with the choicest things a great market like New York affords, while fruit, milk, cream, eggs and similar articles are secured fresh every day from the vast dairy and agricultural region through which the road runs. All through trains carry dining-cars, whose management is under the direct control of the company.

ANY RAILROAD AGENT will be glad to give further information in regard to the Lackawanna service which embraces three through trains leaving Chicago at 10:35 A. M. (arriving at New York 3:30 P. M.); 2:30 P. M. (arriving New York 7:20 P. M.); and 9:15 P. M. (arriving New York 6:15 P. M.), and full particulars will be cheerfully furnished upon application to George A. Cullen, General Western Passenger Agent, 101 Adams street, Chicago.

If your back aches, and you feel sick, languid, weak and miserable day after day—don't worry. Doan's Kidney Pills have cured thousands of women in the same condition. Mrs. A. Heiman of Stillwater, Minn., says: "But for Doan's Kidney Pills I would not be living now. They cured me in 1899 and I've been well since. I used to have such pain in my back that once I fainted. The kidney secretions were much disordered, and I was so far gone that I was thought to be at death's door. Since Doan's Kidney Pills cured me I feel as if I had been pulled back from the tomb."

GAINING ON THE FAIR SEX

According to This Report Men Will Soon Outnumber the Women.

Frau Gnauck-Kuehne is one of the greatest German authorities on the modern feminist movement, and after mature study and the collection of statistics she has come to the conclusion that the superfluity of women in so many European countries is a fact which in the first place is in no sense an evil, and in the second place is rapidly disappearing.

In another twenty years, she believes, the tide will begin to turn the other way and the men will be in the majority even in such countries as England and Germany, where at the present time women immensely predominate. Some of her statistics are most interesting. In Luxembourg, for example, in 1890 there were 1,002 women for every 1,000 men. There are now only 999. In Australia the proportion has been reduced in the same time from 1,044 to 1,035, in Hungary from 1,015 to 1,009, in Switzerland from 1,057 to 1,035, in Sweden from 1,065 to 1,049, in Germany from 1,040 to 1,032, in England from 1,055 to 1,047. She does not believe that any European nation except Russia will long continue to increase rapidly in proportion. England has begun to follow the example of France and Germany will certainly follow England's footsteps.

In all "advanced" European states the birth rate is either becoming stationary or begins to show a backward tendency.

Just Wonderful.

Vestry, Miss., Jan. 1st (Special).—The case of Mrs. C. W. Pearson, who resides here, is a particularly interesting one. Here is the story told by Mr. Pearson, her husband, in his own words. He says:—

"My wife's health was bad for a long time. Last July she was taken terrible bad with spasms. I sent for the doctor, and after making a thorough examination of her, he said undoubtedly the cause of her trouble was a disordered state of the Kidneys. His medicine didn't seem to be doing her much good, so as I heard about Dodd's Kidney Pills, I got her a box just to give them a trial. Well, the effect was just wonderful. I saw that they were the right medicine and I got two more boxes. When she had taken these she was so much better that she had increased thirty pounds in weight. She is now quite well, and we owe it all to Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Knew Her Grammar.

The judge's little daughter, although she had talked several times through the telephone to her father, had never gone through the formalities necessary in calling him up. The first time she tried it she took the receiver off the hook, as she had seen others do, placed her lips to the transmitter and said:

"Hello! I want to talk to papa."

"Number, please," said Central.

"Singular," she answered, surprised at the question, but proud that she knew something of the rudiments of grammar. —Youth's Companion.

BOY'S TERRIBLE ECZEMA.

"When my little boy was six months old, he had eczema. The sores extended so quickly over the whole body that we at once called in the doctor. We then went to another doctor, but he could not help him, and in our despair we went to a third one. Matters became so bad that he had regular holes in his cheeks, large enough to put a finger into. The food had to be given with a spoon, for his mouth was covered with crusts as thick as a finger, and whenever he opened the mouth they began to bleed and suppurate, as did also his eyes. Hands, arms, chest, and back, in short the whole body, was covered over and over. We had no rest by day or night. Whenever he was laid in his bed, we had to pin his hands down; otherwise he would scratch his face, and make an open sore. I think his face must have itched most fearfully.

"We finally thought nothing could help, and I had made up my mind to send my wife with the child to Europe, hoping that the sea air might cure him, otherwise he was to be put under good medical care there. But, Lord be blessed, matters came differently, and we soon saw a miracle. A friend of ours spoke about Cuticura. We made a trial with Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Resolvent, and within ten days or two weeks we noticed a decided improvement. Just as quickly as the sickness had appeared it also began to disappear, and within ten weeks the child was absolutely well, and his skin was smooth and white as never before. F. Hohrath, President of the C. L. Hohrath Company, Manufacturers of Silk Ribbons, 4 to 20 Rink Alley, South Bethlehem, Pa. June 5, 1905."

Previous Apology.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Pure Food.

St. Paul.—The new code, when it goes into effect March 1 next, will make several changes in the pure food laws and will impose several additional obligations upon the dealers.

One section of the code requires that milkmen in all municipalities must have a license. Under the old law licences were required only of men milkmen in towns of over 1,000 inhabitants. The new code makes no exemption of this kind.

"Dairymen can't deliver milk in any old can," said Mr. Slater, "but in the small villages they must have a wagon with their name and number the same as they do in larger town, thus giving the people of the small towns the same protection as the people in the larger towns."

Another section in the new code bars candies colored with coal tar dye and makes no exception to the rule, even if the product is labled with the names. After March 1 all candy must be colored only with vegetable color.

Reward is Offered.

Minneapolis. — The murderers of Charles O. Bader, who was shot while in his barroom in the Falls hotel, 416 Second street south, are still at liberty. Nearly a dozen men were taken to police headquarters and subjected to the most severe cross-examination by the chief of police, but they were all able to account for their whereabouts at the time the murder and robbery occurred and were released.

Mayor David P. Jones kept in close touch with Superintendent of Police Doyle, and issued the following proclamation:

"In view of the bold and atrocious crime of Saturday, Dec. 23, whereby a citisen of Minneapolis was murdered deliberately and, without provocation by a desperate robber, I hereby, under authority invested in me, offer a reward of $500 for the arrest of the murderer and his accomplices, with evidence to insure their conviction in the courts."

State Fair.

Hamline.—The Minnesota State Fair of 1906 will be held the week of Sept. 3. President C. N. Cosgrove and Sec. E. W. Randall of the state fair association returned from Chicago with the information that the fair managers and cattlemen had reserved the first week in September for the Minnesota exposition.

The Minnesota fair dates are always arranged in connection with the dates of the other state fairs so that there may be no conflict among the big expositions of the West. Mr. Randall and Mr. Cosgrove were at the meeting of the association of fair managers the first week in September was again reserved for Minnesota.

A Wild Man.

Minneapolis.—An unknown man, armed with a shot gun and a revolver, held undisputed sway in a box car on the St. Louis tracks, between this city and Hopkins.

The strange man started the trouble by firing point blank at a man and woman who were walking near the Imperial and Great Western elevators. The two people took fright and sought safety in the Great Western elevator. The shot fired at them missed them by only a few feet. The strange man gave no reason whatever for his action.

When he saw his intended victims running away he jumped into an empty box car and for two hours kept up a fusillade from his point of vantage.

Stabbed.

Winona.—Victor Malowicki is in jail charged with stabbing Frank Geisel through the lungs and F. O'Brien in the arm.

Malowicki and three other young men had an altercation on the street and went into Erpelding's saloon. Malowicki says he thought the other three were going to jump on him, and he pulled a knife, slashing Geisel just above the heart. O'Brien tried to get between them and got cut on the arm. Malowicki was arrested at his home. He was all prepared to leave the city.

Railroad is Sold.

Mankato.—The sale of the Duluth, St. Cloud, Glencoe and Mankato road to E. L. Tobie and company of St. Paul, is practically completed and the and the purchase price is to be turned over next week.

Capt. A. H. Reed, Glencoe, has resigned as president and has issued a statement in which he claims the directors were scared into selling through intimations by Tobie and company, that they would have a receiver appointed.

News Notes.

Excelsior—David Granbrill, a Minnetonka resident, narrowly escaped death while driving over the ice road from Tonka Bay to Excelsior. The ice gave away where the water was fifteen feet deep, and Granbrill managed to escape. The horse went down and was drowned and the wagon could not be recovered.

Hamline—Frank Reed has been reelected manager of athletics at the university and the coming season will mark his third year as athletic managers.

St. Paul—The state is making a fight for title to 151,000 acres of swamp lands in the northern part of the state.

St. Peter—Quite a snug little fortune has just been received by Thomas Hannigan, an influential farmer of Cleveland township. The money, $3,000, was his share of the estate of his sister, Rosanna Hannigan of Providence, R. I., and in a fashion it came to him most unexpectedly.

CHURCH CONCERNS.

Dr. Walter W. Webb, president of Neshotah college, has been unanimously elected bishop coadjutor to Bishop Lea Nicholson, of the Milwaukee Episcopal diocese.

Rev. A. Loyd, of St. Ambrose's church, Birmingham, is going to distribute the members of his choir among the congregation, "where their examples will arouse those sitting near them."

The oldest clergyman in England is Rev. John Edward Kempe, M. A., who has been in holy orders for 72 years, being now 95 years of age. He has been chaplain in ordinary to King Edward since 1901.

In accordance with the expressed desire of the Roman Catholics of Nevada, that state will be made a separate diocese. Most of it has hitherto former part of the diocese of Sacramento. A splendid cathedral will be built in Reno on the site of a church that was burned recently.

Dr. William M. Zaring, of Indiana conference, has completed 52 years of active service. In that period he has been out of his pulpit because of sickness only six times. He will not be superannuated, either, for the entire membership of Grace church, Indianapolis, has petitioned for his return.

It is 60 years since Rev. Henry Francis Lyle, who wrote the beautiful hymn, "Abide With Me," died at Nice, and this year a final effort is being made in the far-distant little seaport in Devonshire, where he lived and ministered for 25 years, to complete the rebuilding of the little memorial church which has taken the fishermen 30 years to build.

Pope Pius at present is occupied in collecting the bad debt of the vatican. It was the custom of Pope Leo to help Roman families who had met with financial distress. In this way several notable families were able to tide over difficulties, but large sums thus loaned have not been returned. One marquis who owes $25,000 is to be sued. In all departments of the vatican economy is the order of the day.

DOINGS OF SOME PEOPLE.

Mrs. Clora Curtis, aged 74, was mayor of Cimarron, Kan., for three terms, and is credited with having saved the city from bankruptcy through her excellent management. Mrs. Curtis, who died last September, might have had a fourth term, but declined on account of deafness.

Five men have been arrested at Reno, Nev., for a mail order fraud. Under the title of "Cromwell Simon State University of Reno, Nev.," they put advertisements in the papers offering for ten cents to furnish all information necessary to obtain any degree in the gift of the university.

A. J. Seaman, an eccentric bond buyer of Omaha, who lives on nine cents a day, is receiving hundreds of letters from women who wish to marry him. Seaman's story was printed in the Sunday papers. To those inclosing a stamp Seaman is answering on a postal card, making one cent on each applicant.

A few years ago an Indian on the Coeur d'Alene reservation brought to the reservation two "Belgian hares." Their descendants are now numbered by tens of thousands and they are devastating the crops of white settlers far and near. To make matters worse, the Indians believe that to kill a rabbit or hare brings bad luck.

A stone carving of a grizzly bear in the attitude of defending her cubs has been made by A. C. Thompson, Seattle, and will be shipped to Alaska, to be placed over the grave of R. Shadesty, one of the most prominent Indians of the north when alive. He died on December 17, 1903, leaving $600 to pay for the monument.

MALARIA???

Generally That Is Not the Trouble.

Persons with a susceptibility to malarial influences should beware of coffee, which has a tendency to load up the liver with bile.

A lady writes from Denver that she suffered for years from chills and fever which at last she learned were mainly produced by the coffee she drank.

"I was also grievously afflicted with headaches and indigestion," she says, "which I became satisfied were likewise largely due to the coffee I drank. Six months ago I quit its use altogether and began to drink Postum Food Coffee, with the gratifying result that my headaches have disappeared, my digestion has been restored and I have not had a recurrence of chills and fever for more than three months. I have no doubt that it was Postum that brought me this relief, for I have used no medicine while this improvement has been going on." (It was really relief from congestion of the liver caused by coffee.)

"My daughter has been as great a coffee drinker as I, and for years was afflicted with terrible sick headaches, which often lasted for a week at a time. She is a brain worker and excessive application together with the headaches began to affect her memory most seriously. She found no help in medicines and the doctor frankly advised her to quit coffee and use Postum.

"For more than four months she has not had a headache—her mental faculties have grown more active and vigorous and her memory has been restored.

"No more tea, coffee or drugs for us, so long as we can get Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Charles T. Yerks, after making liberal provision for his wife and children as long as they live, and a few minor bequests to friends and relatives, left practically all of his great estate to the public, $100,000 going to the University of Chicago, $750,000 and the mansion to an art museum and the remainder to build and endow a hospital.

In a fit of despondency Clarence Barnum, a farmer living near Rochester, Mich., murdered his wife, son and daughter with an ax, and blew out his brains with a shotgun.

WASHINGTON LETTER

PRESIDENT HAS LEARNED LESSON ALL PRESIDENTS MUST.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL

Man That Has Been Long Service—A Representative That Has Decided Views on the Training of Children.

WASHINGTON.—Those who anticipated a row between President Roosevelt and congress have been disappointed so far this session. It takes two to make a quarrel, and in the present instance the man in the White House refrains from getting into any strenuous controversy with the coordinate branch of the government up on Capitol hill. This does not mean that the president is not insisting upon his ideas and policies, for he is most emphatically, but he is proving that he is a diplomat as well as a constructive statesman.

The president has learned the lesson that all presidents have learned in the past that congress is just as powerful as the executive, and the purposes and policies of the latter can be completely thwarted if the president works at cross purposes with congress. Mr. Roosevelt has set out to accomplish certain things, and he recognizes the necessity of having congress with him to accomplish these purposes. This is true in railroad rate legislation, but he worked up such a tremendous popular sentiment that he has brought congress around to his way of thinking by the influence of that sentiment, and now he and the majority in both houses are working harmoniously to the same end where two years ago there was scarcely a corporal's guard in congress that would have stood for the present administration policy.

One instance in which the president has yielded to congress is the case of Mr. Bishop, secretary and "press agent" of the Panama commission. The first few days' debate in congress showed that it had no patience with the idea of employing a man to "work the newspapers" in favor of the operations of any body of the government. Mr. Roosevelt recognized that this prejudice was deep-seated and, while he thought that Mr. Bishop was doing good work, he yielded to the sentiment and the press work is now cut off at the commission's headquarters.

Splendid Corps of Clerks.

POSTMASTER GENERAL Cortelyou has a splendidly trained corps of clerks and messengers in his own immediate office. On one point they are especially well taught and that is to aid in saving the time of this cabinet officer. The average citizen who calls on the head of a department fails to realize how he trenches on the latter's time. After transacting his business he is liable to engage in a general conversation with the cabinet officer. The manner in which Mr. Cortelyou gets rid of this class of callers was clearly shown the other day. A citizen from out west was introduced by his congressman and after transacting the business they had come upon this western gentleman began a general conversation.

The postmaster general moved uneasily in his chair as the man went on from one more or less interesting topic to another, but the visitor did not take the hint. Pressing a button and giving a certain number of rings, the full import of which is understood in the outer office, Mr. Cortelyou secured relief. George Pitts, the efficient messenger who has been with Mr. Cortelyou in various positions for years, softly entered the room, looked around and stepped out again. He went to the desk of Mr. Cortelyou's secretary, Mr. Weaver, and gathered up a big bundle of papers. With these he hurried into the postmaster general's room and advanced to where the western citizen was occupying the official's time.

"These cases are from the president and have just come in," Mr. Postmaster General," said the messenger, "and they are urgent."

Postmaster General Cortelyou rose quickly and looked at his visitor with an expression that plainly said: "You see how very busy I am and you must really excuse me, much as I am enjoying your conversation."

After the congressman and his constituent had left the room the bundle of papers were taken back to Secretary Weaver's desk to be again used when needed.

Mr. Sulzer of New York.

ONE of the bright lights, mentally and physically, in congress is the Hon. William Sulzer, of the house. He has a bright, open countenance, surmounted by an aureole of sun-kissed locks, that fairly entitle him to the name of "read-head." He is mentally bright, quick-witted and somewhat of an orator. He is a long, lank specimen, who would more naturally be supposed to hail from the mountains of Tennessee than from "Little Old New York." It is a pity that Mr. Sulzer did not come from Kentucky, as it would have aided still further to identify him with that great Blue Grass statesman, Henry Clay. The resemblance of the New York Tammany congressman, in the shape of his face and head, to the pictures of Henry Clay is really remarkable and is a source of great pride to this red-headed and hopeful statesman.

Mr. Sulzer is a strong man in his district and has represented it for over ten years. It is Republican normally and, except in congressional elections, gives a Republican majority, but Mr. Sulzer carries it usually by big majorities, running as high as 11,000 in some years. In state elections and city elections the Republicans carry it, but when Sulzer is up for reelection he carries the people with him.

Mr. Sulzer is now dean of the New York city delegation, and has been in the house longer, continuously, than any other Democrat north of Mason and Dixon's line. There are only seven other Democrats in the house who have served longer than he has.

The New York statesman is independent in his thought and action, and when a Republican policy appeals to him he does not hesitate to support it. He is heart and soul with the president on the latter's proposed remedy for unjust railroad rates and in speaking about it the other day Mr. Sulzer said: "I am with the president in this railroad rate legislation, because the president is right and the house will give him the right kind of a bill. I have been giving some study to the question and expect to have something to say when the bill comes up in the house."

Roughing It.

REPRESENTAtive George Gilmore Gilbert, of Kentucky, has little patience with the modern system of coddling children. He thinks that youngsters ought to be made to rough it and they ought not to be submitted to too frequent bathing. In discussing the question of healthy children and how the young ones should be brought up to make strong men and women, Mr. Gilbert said to a group of his colleagues the other day: "Well-to-do mothers, I mean mothers who employ nurses to attend to their babies, often ask why the children of their hard-working neighbors and mothers of large families are as a rule healthy and rosy-cheeked. Those who are not mothers have frequently commented on the fact that the children whose parents have to work hard to make both ends meet are so rugged and healthy, while the little ones of well-to-do parents are puny and sickly. The cause of this condition is easy to explain.

"The mothers of large families do not have time to be always looking after the little ones, who are thus free to play in the back yards and roll around in the dirt. Once a week is about as often as they get a scrub. But the little pet of the well-to-do woman cannot play and roll around in the dirt, and the bath is administered about twice a day. Thus nature suffers and the little helpless thing is subjected to colds from slight drafts. A certain amount of dirt is good for the babies. They thrive on it and grow fat and strong. A baby should not be treated and handled like a hothouse plant. Let the little things have plenty of air and let them roll on the floor of the house and on the grass in the yard. Give nature a chance and the babies will grow strong and healthy, and be less fretful at night."

The Real Boss.

Tommy—I'm playin' theater.

Elsie—Oh, let me play, too. I'll be the boss.

Tommy—Oh, no, I will. The manager always has to be a man.

Elsie—Of course. I mean I'll be the leading lady.—Philadelphia Press.

Richard—Have you heard what Sharpe gave his mother-in-law for a birthday present?

Jones—No; what?

ALL EUROPE IS ALARMED

TWO NATIONS SEEM DRIFTING RAPIDLY TO HOSTILITIES OVER MOROCCO.

Only the German Emperor Can Say Whether Break Will Come. England's Position is a Strong Factor in the Matter.

London, Jan. 8.—With the Morocco conference at Algeciras only ten days off, there is a deplorable revival of alarmist feeling in London, Paris and Berlin concerning the outlook. Russia's condition—with the imperial authorities holding the upper hand, and the workmen darkly planning a larger uprising—is for the time taking second place in European thought.

London sentiment oscillates between the serenity born of the statement by Moret, the Spanish premier, that all the powers will enter the conference to reach a pacific outcome, and the alarm begotten by the cables from Washington representing American officials as believing that France and Germany have been secretly increasing the efficiency of their armies.

It is thought here that if the discussions at Algerias show Germany inclined to refuse France her rights in Morocco: the two American delegates Messrs. White and Gummere; will offer their best efforts, and that the Washington government, rather than see the conference collapse, will intervene through Mr. Roosevelt, in what a London evening paper calls "Another divinely inspired mediation."

The question asked in all the capitals is: Will Germany create an impasse at Algerciras, throwing the whole Morocco dispute back to the dangerous complications of last spring.

Only William II. can answer this question.

Apparnetly a section of German opinion is not a little disturbed by the way the events are shaping. There are yellow journals in Berlin as well as in Paris, and their unpleasant talk already has had effect enough among German bankers to lead the latter to put forth tranquilizing statements concerning the emperor's New Year's speech to his generals.

DRAINAGE BILL.

Halvor Steenerson Introduces Bill For Reclamation of Minnesota Lands.

Washington, Jan. 8.—A bill proposing appropriate the receipts from the sale of public lands in Minnesota to reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands in the state was presented in the house by Representative Halvor Steenerson. Concerning the purpose of the measure Mr. Steenerson said:

"The bill propose to devote the proceeds of the public lands (exclusive of ceded Indian lands) to reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands on the public domain or on ceded Indian lands.

"There are millions of acres in Northern Minnesota of such lands which will remain worthless until the state and federal authorities take hold of the matter and furnish drainage outlets. It is just as meritorious to reclaim swamp and overflowed lands and make them productive drainage as it is to reclaim arid lands and make them productive by irrigation.

"The proceeds of public lands in so-called arid and semi-arid states—Arizonna, California, Colorada, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington and Wyoming—are devoted to reclamation by irrigation, and the proposed act will place Minnesota on an equal footing with those states.

'It is not fair to put the proceeds of the public lands in Minnesota into the treasury of the United States to be devoted to general expenditures, when the proceeds of the public lands in the states named are devoted to reclamation of their arid lands."

While the bill applies only to Minnesota, it is akin to numerous others of a similar nature that have been introduced.

Not True.

Wahpeton, N. D., Jan. 8.—The report from Breckinridge which stated that the body of Rev. T. M. Edmunds who is supposed to have been drowned in the river here, had been found seems to have no foundation in fact. A crew of men has been at work on the river cutting out the ice and dragging the bed of the river ever since the dissaappearance, two weeks ago, but the body has not been found. A Minneapolis diver was here and examiened the river bed in the vicinity of the hole ice where Mr. Edmunds is supposed to have fallen in, and for several hundred feet below the hole, but he quit work and the search has been abandoned until spring.

THE SUNBEAM.

Congressman Steenerson has udroduced a bill in congress to get governmentaid for the drainage of swamp lands, It is not the purpose of the bill to ask other states to contribute to the drainage of our lands, but does ask that the paoceeds from the sale of government lands in Minnesotat,exclusive of ceded Indian lands, be set aside and made a fund of for the purpose of draining the swam lands, If congressman Steenerson gets this bill through,and we believe he will, it will stop the money going out the state and keep it at home. It seems to us that this matter had ought to have been looked after long ago, but it seems that we have not had a representative in congress, from this district for the past sixteen years, from the old 7th,and now 9th, district that took much interest in any thing, eccept to draw his satery, until we got Steenerson down there, and it seems to us that it had not ought to be necessary for him to make any great campaign for his re nomination, or election, but that the people of this district had ought to say. "You have done well, and now you can take a rest and we will do our part as well as you have done yours,"

We faild to receive any copy of the last weeks Plummer Pioneer, but when we take into consideration how poorly they are usaly addressed and wraped up, we could not blame the post office's for the non deliver of it, the only wonder to us is how any of them could possiably reach their destination; with the adress that is on them, but then the postal clerks don't have many of them to bother with so we suppose a few of them may reach some of the limeted number of it's unfortunate subscribers.

Editor Carr, of the Thief River Falls Press. with others has attempted to scalp editor Hunt of the Sunbeam out of his legal notices in the final proof line. Editor Carr, at that time evidently forgot his good manners, shunned fraternal fellowship, and acted the "selfish hiprocrit," while others with him thought they were the whole thing. But they were snaged proper. -Olberg Journal.

Don't talk about fraternal bro. Anderson when speaking of a "pot gang," of the style of that "trio" as they are a disgrace to the profession, but we will try and warm up their old dried up hides before they get through with us.

Politcts are to be doing some in the 61st district, for Albert Kaiser the wile politician and manipulator of Bagley, has assumed control of the Bemidji Pioneer, one of our distriict's influentil newspapers. Al. is a fighter, and is no doubt looking for some politicians scalp, and woe to the one upon whom he trains his gun.—Olbeg Journal.

It was not for the 61st district that Kaiser bought that paper to mow a swath in, but the 9th. Look out for a stormy March, to be followed by occasional mud showers during the summer, until September, when there will be a snow storm, that will sweep Al. Pioneer, Candidte, and the $17.000 before it like chaff before a tornado.

The lumber is contracted for and will be soon on hand for our new office buiding, which will go up early this spring We shall then put in a first class job plant and the people of Thief River Falls and Plummer can then get their job printing done for the cost of the paper. We will also be prepare, by the last of June to contract with the attorneys of them two places to do all their legal work at almost any old price. The "trio" can then meet our prices or not get the work. They can not claim patronage for patriotism, as the fellow who is gettig the cheap work done can fire this question at them How much consideration did you have for the best interest of your city when you filed your insulting affidavits and started this row on December 11th?

SHE HUGGED A BIG BEAR

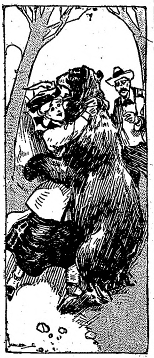
Daring Episode In the Career of a Bold and Frolicsome Texas Girl.

Bear hugging is an amusement which few people, especially young ladies, would care to indulge in, and it is seldom that one would have the chance to embrace a real live "bruin" in his native haunts, even if he—or she—had the nerve and the inclination to try it. The opportunity, however, came not long ago to Miss Bessie Wells, a pretty Texas lass, who visited in Seattle recently and she startled W. D. Cameron, who happened to be with her at the time, by giving a full grown cinnamon bear in Yellowstone park a good squeeze around the neck, says the Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer.

Miss Wells is the fifteen-year-old daughter of a wealthy cotton dealer of Austin, Tex. She is a beauty of the true southern type, imbued with daring and nerve. Recently with her father, her aunt and her grandfather, Colonel W. G. Walling, she started on a tour of the northwest.

The party visited Seattle and then went to Yellowstone park. They made the journey through the park in one of the wagons utilized for tourist travel, and Mr. Cameron happened to be in the party during that trip. He described Miss Wells' daring escapade:

"Our party had stopped for the noon hour luncheon, and while the meal was being prepared Miss Wells and I started out to pick a few berries. We had gone but a short distance when, about a hundred yards away, we saw a large cinnamon bear browsing among the bushes. Knowing that all the animals in the park are more or less tame, we approached the beast. I held up my hand, and the bear, thinking that I had something for him to eat, stood on his hind feet and reached up, but, finding that he had been deceived, shook his head angrily and walked away. My young companion then ran back to the wagon and returned with a few cookies. Again we approached the bear, and Miss Wells held one of the cookies up in her hand. The bear repeated the same performance he had gone through with me, but this time he found something. Miss Wells gradually drew back her hand while the bear was reaching for it until the animal's head was over her shoulder, and then, while he was eating the cookie, she reached around his neck with her other arm and hugged him tightly. My heart seemed to stop beating, but I dared not yell, for the animal would be startled and attack the girl. When he had finished eating the cookie, however, he merely sauntered off into the brush. In all my experiences I have never seen a more daring act by a woman."



SHE REACHED AROUND HIS NECK AND HUGGED HIM TIGHTLY.

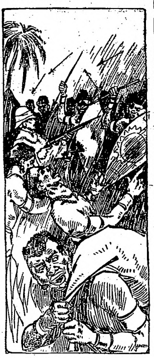
Warned of Danger

Medium Said He Would Be Murdered by Savages.

Adventurer In Africa Disregarded Message From Other World and Came Near Being Killed.

"In January, 1888, on my way from Matabeleland to the Transvaal I spent an afternoon and evening with a Dr. Von A. and his wife, who were then living in a large native Bechwana town near the headwaters of the Notwani river," says a writer in the Detroit Tribune. "At that time Dr. Von A. was much interested in the phenomena of spiritualism, which he was investigating with the aid of his sister-in-law, Miss T., at that time quite a young girl.



"HALF MY FOLLOWERS WERE SHOT."

"That Miss T. was what is known as a medium of great power in certain directions there can be no doubt, and Dr. Von A. firmly believed that if a pencil were placed in her hands, either in the light or in the dark, its movements would be controlled by spirits of the dead, who would write messages or answer questions independently of Miss T.'s will and on subjects with which she had no previous acquaintance. After Dr. Von A. had shown me some curious drawings made in the dark by Miss T.'s hand we held a seance in the room where the light was somewhat dim, as the evening was closing in.

"After some time Dr. Von A. proposed that I should hold the pencil and that Miss T. should place her hand upon mine. I protested that the experiment would be useless, but agreed to try, and, to my astonishment, as I am sure I had nothing to do with the guidance of the pencil, the name of Miss T.'s brother, who had been murdered by the natives to the north of the Zambezi and who had been a great friend of my own, was slowly traced on the paper. The name, David T., was followed by a sentence which read, 'Selous, go out of the country.' These words were repeated several times, my hand always holding the pencil that wrote them, but unaided by any conscious action of my own. I then said aloud, 'Well, I wonder why David wants me to go out of the country?' and the pencil, still held, but not controlled, by my hand, slowly wrote, 'Because you will be murdered by the natives.' The last sentence was written over and over again, and my friends urged me to give heed to the warning I had received and, at any rate, to give up the idea of crossing the Zambezi.

"However, I had made great preparations for this expedition and, in fact, invested my whole fortune in the undertaking, so I could not think of abandoning it, and in due course started on my long journey to the north.

"On the 8th day of July, some six months after the date of the warning I had received at the seance in Dr. Von A.'s house, I was camped far to the north of the Zambezi near the Kafue river. I had about twenty-four native attendants with me, but no white companion. We were at the time in the midst of a number of villages of the Mashukulumbwe tribe, and I was the first white man who had ever visited this particular district. Suddenly our camp was attacked in the darkness of the night, without any warning, by overwhelming numbers of naked savages, led, as I afterward found out, by some rebel Barotse armed with guns and rifles, the very people who had been responsible for the murder of my friend David T. a few years previously.

"Half my native followers were shot or assagaied in the first rush of the attack, and of the few who escaped each one got off by himself under cover of the long grass and fled southward through the darkness toward the distant Zambezi river. I myself was untouched by either bullet or barbed assagai, but presently found myself only half clothed and alone in central Africa, hundreds of miles from the nearest point where I could possibly obtain any assistance. I managed to get away, however, with my rifle and four cartridges. It was fourteen days before I rejoined the remnants of my party near the Zambezi river, and during that time I had another very narrow escape from being murdered and lost my rifle in the scrimmage. For days, in fact, I lived in the very shadow of violent death, and my escape from all the perils which encompassed me was little less than miraculous.

"For some years after my escape from the Mashukulumbwe I believed that the warning I had received did really emanate from the spirit of my friend, David ——, through the medium of his sister, but I am now inclined to think that the communication was derived from the brain of the medium herself, though I do not believe that she consciously controlled the movements of the pencil that wrote the message any more than I did myself. But Miss T., who was the daughter of a missionary long resident in Matabeleland, had known me since she was a child and was, therefore, probably interested in my welfare. She knew, too, that I was going into the then unknown lands beyond the Zambezi, somewhere near the country where her brother had not long before been murdered by the natives, and she doubtless dreaded that I might meet with the same fate."

BULGING GUN BARRELS.

The Ruin That Is Wrought by Careless Handling.

I have sold guns for ten years, and in that time four of them have had their barrels bulged, one by snow, one by dirt, one by sand and one by something else getting into it. One man crawling through a fence got a little snow in the muzzle. He could not remove it with his finger, so concluded to wait and shoot it out, which he did, but he found a bulge like a pullet's egg on the end of the barrel. Another got some earth in the muzzle and shot it out, and he, too, found the same kind of a bulge on the end of his gun. Another fired his gun at ducks, which knocked him over on his back and fairly got away from him. When he picked up the gun he found a narrow raised band around the barrel fourteen inches from the muzzle. In this case a wad had probably lodged there. This customer thinks the manufacturers ought to give him a new set of barrels. I tell him if the barrels had not been good ones it would have been a burst instead of a bulge, which might have maimed or killed him. Another man lying on a point brought down a duck with a broken wing which scurried for the water. The man ran and struck the duck with the muzzle of the gun and in so doing got sand in it. He blew most of it out and shot out the rest of it. Well, after that shot he found a little blister two inches from the muzzle about the size of a man's little finger.

Moral.—Do not shoot obstructions of any kind out of your gun if you value your life or gun.—Uncle Dan in Amateur Sportsman.

Something Wanted.

A bachelor, old and cranky, was sitting alone in his room. His toes with the gout were aching, and his face was o'erspread with gloom, no little ones' shouts to disturb him—from noises the house was free. In fact, from cellar to attic 'twas as still as still could be. No medical aid was lacking; his servants answered his ring, respectfully answered his orders and supplied him with everything. But still there was something wanted, which he could not command—the kindly words of compassion, the touch of a gentle hand. And he said, as his brow grew darker and he rang for the hireling nurse "Well, marriage may be a failure, but this is a jolly sight worse."

Kept Awake.

"How are you getting on with your music, my dear?" inquired a lady of her niece.

"Well, of course," replied the niece diffidently, "it wouldn't be proper for me to compliment myself, but some of the neighbors have told me they have stayed awake at night for hours listening to my playing."

THE SON OF HIS FATHER.

Irate Pedagogue Cleverly Reproved by His Sagacious Offspring.

A professor of mathematics in a leading New England college had been much annoyed by the students coming to class without their textbooks. Various reasons were given. One man said that some one had borrowed his book, relates Judge.

"That's no excuse," said the irate professor. "Hereafter your work and your book are to be here. Any man who fails to bring them will be marked zero. No excuse of any kind will be taken."

The professor's son was a member of this class, and was the first one to be called up at the next recitation.

"Adam, problem 14 at the board," called the professor.

"Pardon me, professor,' said his son; "but I haven't my book."

"Haven't your book?" roared the professor. He was doubly angry because his own son was the first offender. "Didn't you hear what I said yesterday?"

"Yes, professor; but my father borrowed my book last night, and he didn't bring it back."

A New Being.

Shepard, Ill., Jan 8th (Special).—Mrs. Sarah E. Rowe, who is residing here, says she feels like "A New Being," although she is in her fifty-seventh year. Why? because she has taken Dodd's Kidney Pills, that well known medicine that has put new life into old bodies, and has come as a God-send into homes of sorrow and suffering. She says:—

"No one knows what awful torture I suffered with Rheumatism and Kidney Trouble, until I got cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills. This grand remedy drove the Rheumatism out of my body, nothing else ever did me any good. Dodd's Kidney Pills are worth one hundred times their price, for they have made me, though I am fifty-seven years old, a new being. I am in better shape now than I have been for many years, and I owe it all to Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Hair Finally Had to Be Cut to Save Any—Scalp Now in Good Condition—Cured by Cuticura.

"I used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment for a diseased scalp, dandruff, and constant falling of hair. Finally I had to cut my hair to save any at all. Just at that time I read about the Cuticura Remedies. Once every week I shampooed my hair with the Cuticura Soap, and I used the Ointment twice a week. In two months' time my hair was long enough to do up in French twist. That is now five years ago, and I have a lovely head of hair. The length is six inches below my waist line, my scalp is in very good condition, and no more dandruff or itching of the scalp. I used other remedies that were recommended to me as good, but with no results. Mrs. W. F. Griess, Clay Center, Neb., Oct. 23, 1905."

WOMEN WHO SUFFER

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills the One Remedy Particularly Suited For Feminine Ills.

To women who suffer Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are worth their weight in gold. At special periods a woman needs medicine to regulate her blood supply or her life will be a round of pain and suffering. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are absolutely the finest medicine that ever a woman took. They actually make new blood. They are good for men too—but they are good in a special way for women.

"It was three years ago last spring that my health failed me," says Mrs Arthur Conklin, of No. 5 Coldwater street, Battle Creek, Mich. "I suffered from leucorrhœa and other troubles that, I presume, were caused by the weakness it produced. I had sinking spells, nervous headaches, was weak and exhausted all the time and looked like a walking skeleton.

"My back and limbs would ache almost continually and there were days when I was absolutely helpless from sick headache. I tried one doctor after another but cannot say that they helped me at all. My liver was sluggish and I was troubled some with constipation.

"One day a physician who has now retired from practice met my husband on the street and inquired about my health. He advised my husband to get some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for me, said they were a good medicine, better for my trouble than he could put up. I tried them, improved steadily and soon was entirely cured. As soon as the leucorrhoea was cured the headaches and other pains stopped. I am entirely well now but intend to continue to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a spring tonic."

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Is Constitutional

St. Paul.—The inheritance tax law, as passed by the last legislature, is held to be constitutional in a decision handed down by the supreme court. The opinion means to the state about $600,000 in back taxes.

The opinion resulted from the refusal of Probate Judge Bazille to appoint appraisers to ascertain the value of legacies and devises made by Paul D. Ferguson. Judge Bazille refused to comply with the request and the case was carried into the Ramsey county district court. There an application for a writ of mandamus was denied on the grounds that the law was unconstitutional.

The tax is 1½ per cent on legacies of more than $10,000 or under $50,000, 3 per cent on legacies of $50,000 to $100,000 and 5 per cent on legacies of more than $100,000. There are seventeen large estates that are liable and the taxes accruing to the state will be about $600,000.

Did Not Know Santa.

Minneapolis.—A bull terrior who did not like the looks of Santa Claus came near spoiling a Christmas celebration at the home of E. R Cambell. As it was he chased the jolly saint out of doors, seized him by the seat of the trousers and was only persuaded to let go when the old fellow through off his false whiskers and called the dog by name.

There is a little Miss at the Cambell residence and it is the custom to have a celebration for her every New Year's eve. This year one of the big brothers-in-law consented to act the part of Santa and dress up in the most aproved fashion with whiskers, gorgeous padded clothes, fur, bells and a big sack of toys.

But Mr. Bull Terrior had never heard of Santa Claus. To him the weird stranger looked more like a burglar than anything else and with a bound and a growl he rushed at the supposed intruder. Santa turned and fled, but not before the dog had fastened his teeth in the padded trousers.

Silver For the Governor.

St. Paul.—Governor and Mrs. John A. Johnson enjoyed a silver Christmas. The governor's appointees in the capitol joined in giving them a full dinner set of silver in the Paul Revere pattern, enclosed in a rosewood box with a silver plate, carrying the inscription: "Presented to Governor and Mrs. John A. Johnson, Christmas, 1902. 'The Official Family.'"

The governor's staff waited on him New Year's Day with a present of a silver tea service, matching the dinner set. The presentation was made by the chaplain, Father James Lawler of this city, and the governor responded in a short speech of thanks.

In Prison.

Stillwater.—Mrs. Stella Brennan of Minneapolis, who was sent to the state prison in this city for life for the murder of three of her stepchildren, arrived here in charge of Sheriff Dreger, Jailer Nels Clausen and Mrs. Mary Woodburn, matron of the jail. The prisoner was smiling when she alighted from the car and maintained her cheerful expression when she entered the prison doors. The work she will be required to do while in confinement has not yet been determined by the prison authorities.

Many Old Timers.

St. Paul.—The state census report just issued gives some interesting figures on the movement of population to and from the state and between different parts of the state. There are 31,049 persons enumerated who have lived in the state forty-seven years, or since its admission to the Union. As the territorial census of 1857 gave a population of 150,037, it will be seen that one-fifth of them are still living in the state. Of these old settlers, Hennepin county has 4,431, Ramsey 3,179, Filmore, 1,363 and Goodhue 1,208.

News Notes.

Duluth—Nine draft horses, said to have belonged to E. E. Townsend, a transfer man of Minneapolis, were shot on account of glanders.

St. Paul—The St. Paul Catholic Orphan asylum announced that it had received from James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railway company, $100 as his annual contribution to the institution.

St. Paul—The Minnesota National Guard associatisn begins its twenty-sixth annual convention at the armory.

Minneapolis—This city will be the convention city of the northwest if not of the entire United States this year. Many of the largest national associations will meet here through this year. The G. A. R. Encampment in August promises to be the greatest gathering in the history of the Grand Army.

St. Paul—Fire starting in the laundry of St. Joseph's hospital, caused a panic among the employess and the inmates. Hysterical nurses rushed frantically about the halls and sick persons sprang from beds of pain in a vain effort to ascertain the seriousness of the fire.

HIGH CLASS DRUGGISTS

AND—OTHERS.

The better class of druggists, everywhere, are men of scientific attainments and high integrity, who devote their lives to the welfare of their fellow men in supplying the best of remedies and purest medicinal agents of known value, in accordance with physicians' prescriptions and scientific formula. Druggists of the better class manufacture many excellent remedies, but always under original or officinal names and they never sell false brands, or imitation medicines. They are the men to deal with when in need of anything in their line, which usually includes all standard remedies and corresponding adjuncts of a first-class pharmacy and the finest and best of toilet articles and preparations and many useful accessories and remedial appliances. The earning of a fair living, with the satisfaction which arises from a knowledge of the benefits conferred upon their patrons and assistance to the medical profession, is usually their greatest reward for long years of study and many hours of daily toil. They all know that Syrup of Figs is an excellent laxative remedy and that it gives universal satisfaction, and therefore they are selling many millions of bottles annually to the well informed purchasers of the choicest remedies, and they always take pleasure in handing out the genuine article bearing the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package. They know that in cases of colds and headaches attended by biliousness and constipation and of weakness or torpidity of the liver and bowels, arising from irregular habits, indigestion, or over-eating, that there is no other remedy so pleasant, prompt and beneficial in its effects as Syrup of Figs, and they are glad to sell it because it gives universal satisfaction.

Owing to the excellence of Syrup of Figs, the universal satisfaction which it gives and the immense demand for it, imitations have been made, tried and condemned, but there are individual druggists to be found, here and there, who do not maintain the dignity and principles of the profession and whose greed gets the better of their judgment, and who do not hesitate to recommend and try to sell the imitations in order to make a larger profit. Such preparations sometimes have the name—"Syrup of Figs"—or "Fig Syrup" and of some piratical concern, or fictitious fig syrup company, printed on the package, but they never have the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of the package. The imitations should be rejected because they are injurious to the system. In order to sell the imitations they find it necessary to resort to misrepresentation or deception, and whenever a dealer passes off on a customer a preparation under the name of "Syrup of Figs" or "Fig Syrup," which does not bear the full name of the California Fig Syrup Co. printed on the front of the package, he is attempting to deceive and mislead the patron who has been so unfortunate as to enter his establishment, whether it be large or small, for if the dealer resorts to misrepresentation and and deception in one case he will do so with other medicinal agents, and in the filling of physicians' prescriptions, and should be avoided by every one who values health and happiness. Knowing that the great majority of druggists are reliable, we supply the immense demand for our excellent remedy entirely through the druggists, of whom it may be purchased everywhere, in original packages only, at the regular price of fifty cents per bottle, but as exceptions exist it is necessary to inform the public of the facts, in order that all may decline or return any imitation which may be sold to them. If it does not bear the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package, do not hesitate to return the article and to demand the return of your money, and in future go to one of the better class of druggists who will sell you what you wish and the best of everything in his line at reasonable prices.

INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION.

How Food Headed Off the Insidious Disease.

"In the spring of 1902 I was taken sick—a general breaking down, as it were. I was excessively nervous, could not sleep well at night, my food seemed to do me no good, and I was so weak I could scarcely walk across the room.

"The doctor said my condition was due to overwork and close confinement and that he very much feared that consumption would set in. For several months I took one kind of medicine after another, but with no good effect—in fact, I seemed to grow worse.

"Then I determined to quit all medicines, give up coffee and see what Grape-Nuts food would do for me. I began to eat Grape-Nuts with sugar and cream and bread and butter three times a day.

"The effect was surprising! I began to gain flesh and strength forthwith, my nerves quieted down and grew normally steady and sound, sweet sleep came back to me. In six weeks' time I discharged the hired girl and commenced to do my own housework for a family of six. This was two years ago, and I am doing it still, and enjoy it." Commercialism.

"Do you think this government is safe?"

"One of the best investments I know of," answered the sordid politician. "Its possibilities for paying dividends haven't been scratched as yet."—Washington Star.

YOU HAVE NO RIGHT TO SUFFER

From Constipation, Bowel and Stomach Trouble.

Q. What is the beginning of sickness?
A. Constipation.

Q. What is Constipation?
A. Failure of the bowels to carry off the waste matter which lies in the alimentary canal where it decays and poisons the entire system. Eventually the results are death under the name of some other disease. Note the deaths from typhoid fever and appendicitis, stomach and bowel trouble at the present time.

Q. What causes Constipation?
A. Neglect to respond to the call of nature promptly. Lack of exercise. Excessive brain work. Mental emotion and improper diet.

Q. What are the results of neglected Constipation?
A. Constipation causes more suffering than any other disease. It causes rheumatism, colds, fevers, stomach, bowel, kidney, lung and heart troubles, etc. It is the one disease that starts all others. Indigestion, dyspepsia, diarrhoea, loss of sleep and strength are its symptoms—piles, appendicitis and fistula, are caused by Constipation. Its consequences are known to all physicians, but few sufferers realize their condition until it is too late. Women become confirmed invalids as a result of Constipation.

Q. Do physicians recognize this?
A. Yes. The first question your doctor asks you is "are you constipated?" That is the secret.

Q. Can it be cured?
A. Yes, with proper treatment. The common error is to resort to physics, such as pills, salts, mineral water, castor oil, injections, etc., every one of which is injurious. They weaken and increase the malady. You know this by your own experience.

Q. What then should be done to cure it?
A. Get a bottle of Mull's Grape Tonic at once. Mull's Grape Tonic will positively cure Constipation and Stomach Trouble in the shortest space of time. No other remedy has before been known to cure Constipation positively and permanently.

Q. What is Mull's Grape Tonic?
A. It is a Compound with 40 per cent. of the juice of Concord Grapes. It exerts a peculiar strengthening, healing influence upon the intestines, so that they can do their work unaided. The process is gradual, but sure. It is not a physic, but it cures Constipation, Dysentery, Stomach and Bowel Trouble. Having a rich, fruity grape flavor, it is pleasant to take. As a tonic it is unequalled, insuring the system against disease. It strengthens and builds up waste tissue.

Q. Where can Mull's Grape Tonic be had?
A. Your druggist sells it. The dollar bottle contains nearly three times the 50-cent size.

Good for ailing children and nursing mothers.

A free bottle to all who have never used it because we know it will cure you.

BURNED TO DEATH AT ST. PAUL

THOS. CONLY MEETS DEATH IN IN A VACANT ROOM.

It is Supposed the Fire was Started by Dropping a Lighted Cigar Among Rubbish.

St. Paul, Jan. 15.—Thomas Conley, who came to St. Paul ten years ago from Decorah, Iowa, was burned to death in a fire which started above the saloon of Charles Hiller, 153 West Third street, at 11:30 last night. It is not known how the fire started, but it is thought that it was caused by a lighted cigar.

Mr. Conley had been drinking in the saloon of Charles Hiller, who also comes from Decorah, Iowa, and about 10:30 o'clock George Ritter and Frank Smith took Conley to a room above the saloon, which is used by the Army and Navy Union for regular meetings and social sessions. They say that he apparently was sleeping when they left the hall.

An hour later flames were seen bursting from the windows in the second story of the building. Capt. Wm. Hanft of the central police station sent in an alarm of fire.

The body of Thomas Conly was found by members of the fire insurance patrol who were cleaning up the debris. The body was identified by Charles Hiller, the proprietor of the saloon. Patrolman Smith called Corones Miller, who had the remains sent to the morgue.

Thomas Conley was thirty-eight years old and unmarried. He was a railway freight engineer in Iowa and came to St. Paul ten years ago. He had been employed recently by the union depot company sweeping snow from the platforms. His father and and mother live in Decorah, Iowa.

The building is owned by the Hamm Brewing company and is damaged to the extent of $200. The adjoining building, owned by Mrs. Mary Burke, was damaged to the extent of $100. Both losses are covered by insurance. Mr. Hiller says his loss is trifling.

BEATEN FOR $19.

Complaint is Made That Assailants Compelled Victim to Give Them an Order on Bank.

Minot, N. D, Jan 15.—Beaten unmercifully and threatened with instant death by two neighbors unless he signed a check for $19 is the substance of a complant made by Phillip Glunt, a farmer living five miles north of Berthold, to State's Attorney George McGee. Glunt, who is a man of sixty years, claims that two brothers named Furley came to his farm and tried to compel him to give them an order on a Berthold bank for $19, which they claimed he owed them.

Glunt denied that he owed them anything and refused to sign the check. Then, according to his story, they took him into the barn and beat him unmercifully and threatened to kill him unless he complied with their demands. Glunt says he believes the men intended to carry out their their threats, and so at last he signed the order, but wrote on it that it was signed under duress.

Glunt hitched up his team as soon as he was able and drove to the bank to stop payment on the check, but found that it had been paid.

Missing Man.

St. Cloud, Minn., Jan. 15.—James R. Bennett, city attorney for St. Cloud and one of the most prominent lawyers of this part of the state, has disappeared and nothing has been heard from him since last Tuesday.

Bennett was last seen in Minneapolis, the night before the West hotel fire. It was feared he had perished in the fire. Telephone communications with the West Hotel have been kept up and no record of Bennett was found.

Bennet was a member of the firm of Calhoun & Bennett. He leaves a wife and family here.

It was found that Mr. Bennett went to Milwaukee and was all safe.

Slept in Danger.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 15.—While every resident calmly slept, an early Sunday morning fire threatened to wipe out Tunnel City, Wis. Passengers waiting for a train at Tomah, five miles away, noticed the illumination, and word of the fire was sent to the burning town by the railroad telegraph operator.

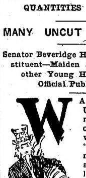
WASHINGTON GOSSIP

UNCLE SAM NOW PURCHASES QUANTITIES OF GEMS.

MANY UNCUT DIAMONDS

Senator Beveridge Hears from a Constituent—Maiden Speech of Another Young Hoosier—The Official Publications.



WASHINGTON.—Uncle Sam has reached that state of prosperity where he is "wearing diamonds." Ten years ago he bought less than a million and a half dollars' worth of these precious stones abroad, while in ten months of the present year he has bought over $25,000,000 worth of cut and uncut diamonds. He has not confined his taste to diamonds, but his plethoric pocketbook has included all sorts of precious stones in its purchasing power. Ten years ago his total outlay of precious stones of all kinds abroad was less than $5,000,000. This year it will probably be $35,000,000 worth, as for ten months the importations have reached the value of $31,359,157.

To a certain degree these tremendously increased imports of diamonds and precious stones are an indication of prosperous times, plenty of money, and also, to some extent, they are a new form of investment, as many people consider the investment of money in diamonds about the safest that can be made. This expenditure of wealth aoroad for precious stones has been productive of work and consequently money to the workmen of the United States. This is shown in the rapid growth of the importations of uncut diamonds.

A few years ago there was established in this country a diamond cutting industry, and it has increased very rapidly in the last decade. In 1896 there were but $78,815 worth of uncut diamonds brought into this country, but since the passage of the present tariff law, giving a preferential to this class of diamonds, their importation has increased until this year over $10,000,000 worth will be imported. For the decade ending with 1905 the value of uncut diamonds imported will reach $60,000,000, and of cut diamonds about $100,000,000, and of other precious stones imported enough to bring the total value for the ten years up to $200,000,000.

A Finished Orator.

SENATOR BEVERIDGE of Indiana has, since his entrance into the senate, been easily the first finished orator of the two branches of congress. His declamation, enunciation, gestures and diction are pretty nearly perfect from an elocutionary standpoint. He has made a great reputation as a debater and an orator, but in addition has added greatly to his fame by his writings. He knows now that his articles are real because a unique experience the other day demonstrated this fact.

He was asked in a very gentle, though somewhat dictative, manner to assist a constituent of one of his colleagues in securing an assistant secretaryship to the president of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railroad. This applicant was not a bit backward He stated his qualifications for the place very minutely, and his letter was written in a good hand and was well composed. The young man wrote that he had read one of the senator's articles on the subject of a young man's chance in the world. Mr. Beveridge in this article, which was written at least a year ago, said that the president of the C. R. I. & P. railroad was looking for a bright young high school gradute to fill a vacancy in his office as assistant private secretary.

The young man in his letter to the senator expressed himself as satisfied with the job, and he enclosed a formal application for the position, which he asked Mr. Beveridge to forward to the right person. The senator was rather taken back by the thought that his purely academic discussion of an abstract subject should have been interpreted as an advertisement, but he wrote a very kind letter to the young man expressing regret that the latter had not applied for the position a year ago.

Fred Landis of Indiana.

WHILE Senator Beveridge wears the bay leaves as a finished orator, he will have to look to them now since the advent of another young Hoosier on the congressional forum. Young Fred Landis, a sallow, hatchet-faced man, with a huge shock of black hair, who came to the house in the last congress, has created a sensation by his maiden speech. Before the holiday recess "Uncle Joe" Cannon, speaker of the house, gave the "kids" free rein and allowed unlimited debate on any subject. This was the opportunity that Fred Landis had been waiting for, and he made his first speech on the floor in an attack upon the insurance system of the country. His success was instantaneous and he was so overwhelmed with congratulations by members who crowded about his desk that the chairman of the committee of the whole had to suggest that "the gentlemen in the receiving line please take their seats."

Mr. Landis is one of four brothers who have all achieved high reputation. His brother "Charlie" has been a representative from Indiana for several terms and is a fine orator and a popular public speaker. Another brother, Kensaw Mountain Landis, who was private secretary to Mr. Gresham when the latter was secretary of state, is now a United States judge in Illinois, and still another brother is in charge of the postal service in Porto Rico. Young Fred was at one time his brother Charlie's secretary and did newspaper work as an assistant on one of the western newspapers. He read law and was admitted to the bar, but suddenly one day in the spring of 1902 he told his brother that he was tired of the job of private secretary and was going out to Indiana to beat George Steele for renomination for congress.

Charlie laughed at the nervy young fellow, but the latter meant what he said He went into Steele's district and, although the latter had been a representative of it in Washington for many years, Landis defeated him, secured the nomination himself and took his seat in the last congress. He was reelected to the present congress by a largely increased majority, and his brilliant speech on the insurance question has fixed his fame as one of the leading orators of the house.

"Smith's Onion."

SENATOR DANIEL of Virginia is the innocent cause of conferring a nickname on such a dignified old institution as the Smithsonian. Since imparting to some of his colleagues the contents of a letter he received from a somewhat illiterate constituent this more or less useful government institution is known as "Smith's Onion." A few days ago the senator received a request to procure for one of his constituents a report on "Smith's Onion." His clerk applied to the agricultural department for a list of publications emanating there, and although that department is the most prolific in official literature, its comprehensive index did not contain any work or report on "Smith's Onion."

The senator then applied to the agricultural congressmen in the house and senate without results. His clerk sat up with the letter one night and finally came to the conclusion that the reading gentleman down in the Old Dominion wanted a report on the "Smithsonian." A report of the Smithsonian institution was secured and sent to the gentleman and it proved to be just what he wanted, and he has written an acknowledgement of the receipt of a very handsome volume containing "highly interesting facts." He is satisfied now that Uncle Sam is a most obliging old fellow and the people throughout the country can get almost any sort of reading matter they want from him.

This assumption that the national government will afford the citizens of the country all the reading matter they want is pretty well founded, for, aside from works of actual fiction, there is scarcely a line of literature that the government has not invaded.

"TOM DUNN" DEAD.

There is general regret in New York city over the death of "Tom" Dunn, ex-sheriff of the county. In the twenty-sixth assembly district, where Dunn resided, every boy on the street knew and was known by him. He was famous as a practical joker of the good-natured kind, and his wit was ever at command. At the ball of the Delaware club a few years ago Dunn was approached, by a good-looking chap who apparently was wearing evening clothes for the first time and was very proud. "Sheriff," he said, "how do you think I look in a dress suit?" "Fine," returned Dunn, "It's a wonder you wouldn't get one of your own."

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

As our friend Latta of that Pioneer keeps blowing about circulation we make the following offer which we dare the "trio" to call. We had more circulation in the post offices where we ware publishing land notices on December 11th, last than the three of the papers that attacted us. We will agree to any fair way, to to prove this to the satisfaction of the public, the looser to pay the expenses.

Should the bill recommended by the department of the Interior, to prohibit settlers on this reservation from making commutation proof until they have made a five years residence on their land be passed by congress, they should also extend the time of making the payment to the government until they was allowed to make final proof. Should a bill be passed to prohibit the making of commutation of homesteads on this reservation, with no provision made for an extension of the time of payment to the government, the settler of limited means would have to get out of here, for with the bad start that they got last year they can not make their payments and keep their land.

There seems to be a disposition on the part of some of the, so-called, republican newspapers in this state, to start a boom for the re-elction of governor Johnson. They had better wait until after the next republican state convention and see if the people and the delegates elecd by them can not nominate a good republican for our next governor, then turn in and elect him. Let the people nominate their candidate on the republican ticket and they will elect their nominee. Fire out every politician that gets up in a county convention and makes a motion for an instructed delegation to the state convention. Allow the people to elect their delegates to the county convention's, and them delegates to elect their delegates to the state convention, and let them go to the state convention with untied hands and place in nomination their candidate for the next republican goveraor and they will elect him in November. But the first politician that starts a packing house for the next republican state convention, will strike the key note for an other overwelming party defeat.

Plant a Tree.

When eating a good pear or apple save the seeds and plant them either in a flower pot, where they will germinate before long, or else directly in the garden, when they will come up next spring. To prevent their loss the place must be covered as a mark. It takes a number of years before they bear fruit, but to see the progress of growth from year to year is always interesting. People often think it is not worth while for them to plant trees. They will not live to have fruit of them and so neglect it entirely. But some one will enjoy the harvest. It is just the individual egotism which causes so much unhappiness and affects all classes of society in many ways.—Hartford Times.

Great Heads and Little Wit.

Great men are usually said to have great memories, but it does not follow that all who have great memories are great men. I remember an idiot in Ohio who was a great curiosity many years ago. He knew the whole Bible by heart from beginning to end, and if any verse was read or repeated to him he could tell exactly in what book and chapter it was to be found and its verse number in the chapter. He was considered a great marvel in this particular, but in every other he was a mental imbecile and could not be trusted even to feed himself.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A GOOD DEFENSE.

The verdict of acquittal in the Wilde man slaughter case, tried at Crookston last Friday, came somewhat as a surprise to many who read the prejudiced reports of the crime at the time it was comitted, last September.

The complete vindication of Mr. Wilde was without doubt largely due to the able manner in which the defense was conducted by Attorney W. E. Rowe, of Crookston, who is fast coming into prominence, as the Bill Erwin of northern Minnesota.

OUR COUNTY BOARD.

Rhoda Minn.

Jan. 16th 1906.

Editor The Sunbeam.

In the last weeks Red Lake Falls papers, we see that at an important January meeting of the county commissioners, some of noted things that they did during this session was to appropriate the sum of one hundred dollars to aid to build a bridge across the Clearwater on section 33 in Deer Park towship We fail to see int the real merits of this very important step. How the worthy County Commissioners could be so liberal to a lot of heavy tax payers, up here in the back woods without roads and not a bridge in sight for miles.

Ii ts now about a year since some of our citizins began to petetion to the county for reasonable aid to build this bridge that is mentioned. Them petitetion were all turned down and given the cold shoulder before spring, and we left to sink or swim, with the water above high water mark.

We wish to call the attention of our Commissioners to the fact, that the majority of the residents in this township and ajoining township's are old tax payers from Garnes, Equality, and also from Johnson, Gully and Eden, which was at one time part of this territory, and are men who have long carriod their part of the countys burden and are justly entitled to reasonable aid, when the need for a bridge is as great as it is here.

At the same session of the board our worthy county Commissioners found the time and the means in the road and bridge fund, to build a 200 foot bridge across the Red Lake River in the town of Louisville mostly for an improvement in a secction of the county where there is graded roads and within a few miles of Red Lake Falls, where they have had bridges enough heretofore to accomidate the traveling public in years past.

Now compare these two propisitions and note the contrast and then ask yourself, if our worthy county Commissioners have acted upon justice and right in this matter?

A Tax Payer.

For a Shave de Luxe.

"Let me give you a tip for which I think you will be grateful," said a local barber in one of the downtown shops the other day. "Always maintain a pleasant feeling and a slight smile if possible when in a barber's chair for the purpose of being shaved. When the face is in a smile and the muscles are relaxed it is very much easier for the barber to run over it with a razor. This is especially applicable to persons who have a tough and wiry beard."—Washington Star.

A Mean Trick.

A Huntsville man has a book on the cover of which is a picture of a man yawning. Whenever his wife begins to lecture him he gets out the book and reads it in front of her. She sees the picture and has to stop talking to yawn. Finally she becomes too tired to talk.—Kansas City Star.

Cynical.

"Which do you think counts for the most in life, money or brains?"

"Well," answered Miss Cayenne, "I see so many people who manage to get on with so little of either that I am beginning to lose my respect for both."—Washington Star.

The Lost.

When a fellow has discovered that all his loose change has filtered through a hole in his trousers pocket it is nearly impossible to get him to accept the scientific proposition that nothing is ever lost.

There is a sever penelty for putting out poison, and the law will be promptly and vigorously enforced should any complaint be made of a volalation of it in th is locality

The meeting to raise funds, to build a boat for the Red Lake River, held at High Landing on Wednesday afternoon was largely attended by the farmers living tributary to the river and a good start made, toward getting a boat ready to start freighting this spring. It was preposed to form a company and make the shares $10,00 each. A committee was appointed to take shares and the sum of $400, was signed at once. The work will be pushed rapidly all along the line, as the peoare awake to the necessity of geting this boat ready to transact business as soon as the ice goes out.

A Two Edged Cure.

A story is told of the wonderful cure from deafness of a patient who was recommended to hear a Wagner opera and to sit near the orchestra by the trombones. The physician accompanied his patient and sat beside him. Suddenly, while the crash of the instruments was at its loudest, the deaf man found he could hear. "Doctor," he almost shrieked, "I can hear!" The doctor gave no sign that he noticed the remark. "I tell you, doctor," repeated the patient in ecstasy, "you have saved me! I have recovered my hearing." Still the physician was silent. He had become deaf himself.—Harper's Weekly.

Over an Abyss

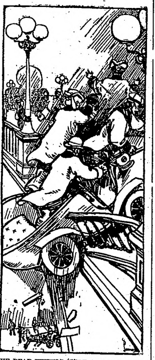
Hanging for an instant that seemed an eternity above an abyss, three men and two women escaped a fatal fall from the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth street viaduct in New York only by the promptness with which they hurled their combined weight toward the front of an automobile that backed with them through the stout iron rail guarding the high drive. In that instant it seemed nothing could hold them back from a frightful plunge to the street far below. The rear wheels of the big machine were over the edge of the big bridge and almost half the bulk of the car had followed them before the frightened passengers could leap from their seats. The four sprang as one, landing in a heap on the forward part of the car. Pausing scarce a fraction of a second to gather strength for a second leap, they threw themselves to the road, where scores of spectators breathless with horror rushed forward to lift them. That the automobile did not fall was regarded as little short of a miracle. Ten days before a touring car had a similar accident.



THE REAR WHEELS WERE OVER THE EDGE OF THE BRIDGE.

Miss Haggerty, one of the women in the car, proved herself a heroine after her first natural impulse to spring from the auto when it was backing at full speed was restrained by her father. From that moment she was independent as any of her companions. None of the men could have saved her, and if she had not joined them in the common effort to hold the machine on the viaduct she must have perished. There was no time even for her father, who sat beside her, to gather her in his arms for a leap. Her own strength and wit were her only hope. She made the two jumps from the rear seat to the front of the car and thence to the road with the agility of a gymnast. Then, almost fainting in the reaction from the terrible moment of suspense, she sank happily into her father's arms.

Besides Miss Haggerty, there were in the car Mrs. W. A. Burke, a daughter of Thomas E. Crimmins, and Justin O'Brien, son of Justice Morgan J. O'Brien. Louis Echel, nineteen years old, was the driver.

The car stopped short when Echel was steering it westward over the viaduct near Eighth avenue. A chain had broken, and it must have thrown the lever to the reverse position and jammed it there, for before any of the persons in the car could alight it began backing swiftly. Echel tried all the devices at his command to stop the auto or change its direction, but the steering gear also failed him, and his efforts only increased the retrograde speed. Miss Haggerty, seeing the driver had lost control of the machine, attempted to jump, but her father prevented her. In the next instant the automobile smashed into the iron rail, tearing off a strip almost twenty feet long, which crashed to the street, imperilling those below.

Easily as a circus rider leaping through a paper hoop the rear of the car burst the guard rail. Fortunately there was enough resistance in the iron to stop the driving gear. Apparently the shock broke enough more of the already damaged machinery to offset the tragic tendency of the first fracture. Miraculously, it seemed, the wheels did not turn in either direction from the moment the rear ones crashed through the rail. A single revolution either way might have resulted fatally to the four persons in the car. As it was, their escape was so narrow that one of them remarked it was the last time he would enter an automobile. Echel hired a team of horses and had the auto dragged to a repair station.

A Wonderful Pagoda.

The great Buddhist shrine, the Shway Dagon at Rangun, is no temple, but a great pagoda, rising from its platform to a height of 368 feet and all completely covered with gold leaf. This platform, with a perimeter of nearly 1,400 feet, is the place of worship. The pagoda itself has no interior. It is a solid stupa of brick raised over a relic chamber. A cutting made into its center has revealed the fact that the original pagoda had seven casings added to it before it attained its present proportions. The shape of the pagoda is that of an elongated cone. It is divided by Burmese convention into twelve parts: First, the base surrounded by a great number of small pagodas; then the three terraces, called Pichayas; next the Bell; the inverted Thabeik, or begging bowl; the Baungyit or twisted turban; the Kyalan or ornamental lotus flower; the Plantain Bud; the brass plate for the Hti or umbrella; the Hti; the Sein bwin or artificial flowers; the vane, and, last of all, the Seinbu or bud of diamonds.—"The Silken East," by V. C. Scott O'Connor.

Prices For Butterflies.

Butterfly collectors are seldom able to estimate with any confidence the value of their collections, since the prices for specimens so constantly vary. A case in point is that of the blue butterfly of Brazil, specimens of which were originally sold for from $50 to $75. Afterward some collectors who supplied the London market ran into a perfect swarm of these butterflies and shipped to England such quantities that better specimens than the original insects sold for $1 each. It not infrequently happens that two or three specimens of a certain family are discovered by collectors, who, encouraged by the high prices received for their finds, are tempted to prosecute their search for this particular variety without result for several years. Suddenly they or some other collector finds the insects grown plentiful, and the cherished varieties of the cabinet become among the commonest specimens.—Chicago Post.

Sociable Spiders.

Spiders have been observed in Madras which live in a sponge-like nest of branching network, penetrated internally by canals of communication and furnished with a number of external apertures. The nests, which may be attached either to the tips of branches or to leaves of the prickly pear, are ashy gray in color and constructed of leaves, with an external covering of the usual sticky threads. The spiders are similar in color to their nests. Their inconspicuous, sheet-like webs radiate in all directions, and as many as five or six nests, connected by intermediate webs, may be found on a single plant. The connecting webs, which are very strong, often form tubular bridges between the nests. From forty to a hundred spiders may be found in a single nest, and males and females inhabit the same nest in the proportion of about seven to one.

Hints About Screws.

Where screws are driven into soft wood and subjected to considerable strain they are very likely to work loose, and it is often difficult to make them hold. In such cases the use of glue is profitable. Make the glue thick. Immerse a stick about half the size of the screw and put it into the hole. Then put in the screw and drive it home as quickly as possible. When there is an article of furniture to be hastily repaired and no glue is at hand, bore a hole, insert the stick, fill the rest of the cavity with pulverized rosin, then heat the screw sufficiently to melt the rosin as it is driven in. Where screws are driven into wood for temporary purposes they can be more easily removed by dipping them in oil before inserting. When buying screws, notice that the heads are small and well cut, that there are no flaws in the body or thread part and that they have gimlet points. A screw of good make will drive as easily into oak as others into pine and will endure having twice the force brought against it.

Pushing the Old Folks Aside.

When the babies are cross and a man would like a quiet retreat there is none for him. But in a few years, when the children are grown and he is in the way, the daughters and mother put their heads together and originate a den. There is no den for the mother because she gracefully eliminates herself by sitting in the kitchen or running over to a neighbor's. It is her natural disposition to hide in a corner or remove herself entirely, and it is not the natural disposition of the father; hence the den. It has a couch and some pipes and tobacco and the books which the neighbors haven't got around to borrowing as yet, though if father begins a story today the book will be found to be loaned out when he wants to finish it tomorrow. The den is a fashionable way of pushing the old man out. If there is one in your house, Mr. Man, don't be deceived.—Atchison Globe.

FOUR YEARS OF AGONY.

Whole Foot Nothing But Proud Flesh —Had to Use Crutches—"Cuticura Remedies the Best on Earth."

"In the year 1899 the side of my right foot was cut off from the little toe down to the heel, and the physician who had charge of me was trying to sew up the side of my foot, but with no success. At last my whole foot and way up above my calf was nothing but proud flesh. I suffered untold agonies for four years, and tried different physicians and all kinds of ointments. I could walk only with crutches. In two weeks afterwards I saw a change in my limb. Then I began using Cuticura Soap and Ointment often during the day and kept it up for seven months, when my limb was healed up just the same as if I never had trouble. It is eight months now since I stopped using Cuticura Remedies, the best on God's earth. I am working at the present day, after five years of suffering. The cost of Cuticura Ointment and Soap was only $6: but the doctors' bills were more like $600. John M. Lloyd, 718 S. Arch Ave., Alliance, Ohio, June 27, 1905."

ALL SICK WOMEN

SHOULD READ MRS. FOX'S LETTER

In All Parts of the United States Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Has Effected Similar Cures.

Many wonderful cures of female ills are continually coming to light which have been brought about by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and through the advice of Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., which is given to sick women absolutely free of charge.

Mrs. Fannie D. Fox

The present Mrs. Pinkham has for twenty-five years made a study of the ills of her sex; she has consulted with and advised thousands of suffering women, who to-day owe not only their health but even life to her helpful advice.

Mrs. Fannie D. Fox, of 7 Chestnut Street, Bradford, Pa., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham

"I suffered for a long time with female trouble, and finally was told by my physician that I had a tumor. I did not want to submit to an operation, so wrote you for advice. I received your letter and did as you told me, and to-day I am completely cured. My doctor says the tumor has disappeared, and I am once more a well woman. I believe Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine in the world."

The testimonials which we are constantly publishing from grateful women establish beyond a doubt the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to conquer female diseases.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. She asks nothing in return for her advice. It is absolutely free, and to thousands of women has proved to be more precious than gold.

JUST AS HE DICTATED IT.

Production of a Stenographer Who Obeyed Orders to the Letter.

"What I want you to do," said the man who had engaged the new stenographer, "is to transcribe my letters exactly as I dictate them. I don't want any of these stilted forms in my correspondence. What I believe in doing is putting my own personality in my correspondence."

"Yes, sir," said the new stenographer, meekly. And this, writes C. W. Taylor, in the Chicago Tribune, is the letter that went forward to a new customer of the firm that afternoon:

"Mr. John B.—what the dickens is the name of that fellow down at Bingville—O, Smith, who was that man at Bingville that asked for prices?—What?—Skidmore?—Sounds like Skiddoo—All right—Let me see; where was I?—John B. Skidmore, Bingville, Tex. Dear Sir—Wait a minute. Better jolly him along a little. My Dear Mr. Skidmore—Replying to your valued letter of the—what date was his letter? Where is his letter, anyhow? Here it is. Writes like a hen walking across a barnyard. Can't make out the date. Looks like 44th. Well, just say, replying to your valued favor of recent date, we take pleasure in saying that we can quote you the following prices:—Say, Smith, what will this duffer stand for? Oh, give it to him harder than that. He lives in Bingville. If I lived in Bingville, I'd thank anyone for soaking me so hard I'd have to leave town. In car lots, $53 a ton. There, that's about 40 per cent. higher than we'd charge anyone else. Now, finish it up with Awaiting your further requests, we beg to remain yours sincerely."

The early symptoms of Kidney Disorder may be the forerunners of Bright's Disease, Diabetes and Dropsy. Mr. W. H. Jeffries, a resident here, tells below how he treated an attack of Kidney Trouble. He says:—

"Before I commenced taking Dodd's Kidney Pills, I had always a tired feeling every morning when I got out of my bed, and my Kidneys were in very bad shape. There was always a dull heavy pain across my loins, and I had hard work to stoop. I took two boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills, the tired feeling and back pains have entirely gone, and I am now cured."

MINNESOTA ITEMS.

St. Paul.—The German-American Veterans' Association had its annual meeting at the association's rooms in the old capitol.

St. Paul.—The officers of the farmers' mutual insurance companies of the state hold their annual meeting at the old capitol.

Minneapolis.—The attorney general holds that all gifts made in anticipation of death are subject to the inheritance tax.

St. Peter.—When the Minnesota National Guard is increased in compliance with the provisions of the Dick law, St. Peter proposes to make a strong effort to land one of the coveted companies.

Lake City.—The Jewell Nursery Company entertained nearly 500 employees Saturday afternoon and evening. A good program was given, home talent being assisted by talent from the cities.

Vernon Center.—The contract to build a new bridge across the Blue Earth river, one mile east of this village, has been given to the Hennepin Bridge Company. The structure will cost $3,000.

Minneapolis.—The National McAll Association has accepted an invitation from the local auxiliary to hold its annual convention here in May.

Minneapolis.—E. Jennings, a carpenter employed on a new two-story building near Twelfth avenue south and Twenty-eighth street, fell from the roof to the ground and was seriously injured.

Minneapolis.—Fifteen persons living at Mrs. A. M. Stafford's boarding house at 16 Ninth street south, had a narrow escape from death by fire and all had to run to the street in their night-clothes.

Minneapolis.—Sunday closing was cheered to the echo by the 200 delegates and spectators present at the opening session of the fortieth annual convention of the Bricklayers and Stonemasons' International Union.

Minneapolis.—Frank Fisher was arrested by Detectives O'Brien and Ahern on a charge of grand larceny. He is accused of taking 900 pounds of copper belonging to the St. Paul City Railway Company.

Winona.—The Mississippi river has at last closed at this point, the date of freezing being the latest known since a record has been kept. The official date of closing was Jan. 8, and the latest before, in the last fifty years, was Jan. 2, in the winter of 1881-2.

Crookston.—There is a movement on foot to create a new county out of the sixteen unorganized townships in the eastern end of Norman county, now in the White Earth Indian reservation. Four reservation townships in Clearwater county also may be included.

Granite Falls.—Big Eagle, chief of the Sioux nation, died at his home near this place and was buried. Many relatives and friends were present. He was sick only two days. His father and grandfather were chiefs before him.

Duluth.—Uncanny noises for three nights in a vacant building which has been locked up since its last tenants moved out several weeks ago, have compelled three families in rooms over the place to seek the aid of the police in solving the problem.

Minneapolis.—For being too obliging to a stranger on the street, Ole Johnson was held up, choked and robbed of his gold watch by Thomas Ahern, who accosted him at Second avenue south and First street and asked the time.

Hayfield.—Frank McVey, arrested twelve miles east of this village, on suspicion of being the murderer of Marshal Ole Havey, was given a hearing before Justice Johnston, and held to the grand jury.

Red Wing.—Arguments for a new trial in the case of the State vs. Henry Prolow, will be made within a few days. A transcript of the case has been prepared and Attorney Nelson for the defendant, and Attorney Johnson for the state, are both ready to present their arguments.

Hamlin.—Nearly half a million head of cattle, en route from the West to Chicago, passed through Minneapolis and St. Paul during 1905, surpassing all records except that of 1895, which still stands ahead by several hundred carloads. One railroad kept a record showing that 14,000 cars of cattle passed through the Twin Cities between Jan. 1 and Dec. 15, 1905.

St. Paul.—Governor Johnson was waited on by a delegation of homeopathic physicians, who protested against his reducing the representation of their school on the state board of medical examiners. In the party were Dr. P. M. Hall, Dr. H. C. Aldrich, Dr. O. K. Richardson and Dr. Margaret Koch.

Crookston.—It is announced that the Minneapolis, Red Lake & Manitoba Railway Company has disposed of $700,000 of its bonds to the First Trust and Savings Bank and James B. Forgan, of Chicago. The bonds are known as first mortgage 5 per cent gold bonds, with interest payable semi-annually in June and December.

Two Harbors.—Eddie Elving, eleven years old, is dead and two other children of Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Elving are seriously ill from the effects of eating highly decorated candy hearts used on a Christmas tree. All three children partook of the candy. Eddie suffered intense agony until he died. The other two children are still in bed, but will probably recover.

Minneapolis.—Wandering the streets, clad only in a calico dress, her mind deranged by exposure, Mrs. Elizabeth Briskow, who lives on the flats, was saved from freezing to death by the South Side police.

Two Harbors.—The body of a man has been found in one of the barns at the racetracks, near the village of Hibbing, on the Meseba range, hanging to one of the rafters by a piece of hay wire. Later, at the undertaking rooms, it was identified as that of John Newman. The body had been hanging in the barn for several days. When last seen, Newman was under the influence of liquor. It is thought he committed suicide.

THE CALL OF THE CANADIAN WEST.

The Greatest Wheat Crop of the Continent.

The year that has just closed has done a great deal towards showing the possibilities of Western Canada from an agricultural standpoint. The wheat crop has run very near to the 100,000,000 bushel limit that was looked upon as too sanguine an estimate only a short time ago, and the area that has been broken to fall wheat for the coming harvest will go a long way towards enabling the farmers of the West to overlap on the 100,000,000 bushel estimate next year. And while the spring and winter wheat have been doing so well during the past few years, the other cereals have been keeping up with the procession. Rye and barley have made immense strides, and peas and flax have been moving steadily along. Dairying, also, has been successfully carried on in the new provinces, and in every stage the farmer has been "striking it rich." To such an extent has the success of the West taken hold of outsiders that the rush of Americans to Saskatchewan and Alberta, which was looked upon as marvelous last year, bids fair to be largely exceeded in 1906, and as there are still millions of acres of free homesteads available, which the building of the new railways will render accessible to the markets, new wheat lands will be opened up ere long. Amongst the first to avail himself of the opportunity presented will be the American settler. In a large number of American cities Dominion Government Agents are located, who are able and willing to give the latest and best information in regard to the new districts which the railways will open up, and there will be no abatement of the rush to the Canadian prairies during the coming season. Some time since a poet in the columns of the Toronto "Star" had the following stirring lines, which throb of the Western spirit:

There's a stir in the air, there's a thrill through the land, there's a movement toward the Great West;
And the eyes of all men for the moment are turned to the country that we love
the best;
For 'tis Canada's day in the world's calendar,
and to this merry toast let us
sup:
"Here's to the land, the young giant of the North, where the prairies are opening
up!"

They come from the East and they come from the South—they come o'er the deep rolling sea—
They come, for they know they will dwell
'neath a flag that makes all men equal and free.
Then, once more the toast, and let every man rise, and cheer ere he sips from the cup:
"Here's to the land, the young giant of the North, where the prairies are opening
up!"

HOW KINGS HAVE DIED.

Henry I. of gluttony.

Edward VI. of a decline.

Charles I. on the scaffold.

George III. as he lived—a madman.

Henry VIII. of carbuncles, fat and fury.

George IV. of gluttony and drunkenness.

Henry VII. wasted away, as a miser ought.

James I. of drinking and the effects of vice.

Charles II. suddenly, it is said, of apoplexy.

Edward III. of dotage, and Richard II. of starvation, the very reverse of George IV.

Henry VI. in prison, by means known then only to the jailer, and now known only in Heaven.

William the Conqueror from enormous fat, from drink and from the violence of his passions.

Henry IV. is said to have died of "fits caused by uneasiness," and uneasiness in palaces in those times was a very common complaint.

UNCONSCIOUS POISONING.

How It Often Happens from Coffee.

"I had no idea," writes a Duluth man, "that it was the coffee I had been drinking all my life that was responsible for the headaches which were growing upon me, for the dyspepsia that no medicines would relieve, and for the acute nervousness which unfitted me not only for work but also for the most ordinary social functions.

"But at last the truth dawned upon me and I forthwith bade the harmful beverage a prompt farewell, ordered in some Postum, and began to use it. The good effects of the new food drink were apparent within a very few days. My headaches grew less frequent, and decreased in violence, my stomach grew strong and able to digest my food without distress of any kind, my nervousness has gone, and I am able to enjoy life with my neighbors and sleep soundly o'nights. My physical strength and nerve power have increased so much that I can do double the work I used to do, and feel no undue fatigue afterwards.

"This improvement set in just as soon as the old coffee poison had so worked out of my system as to allow the food elements in the Postum to get a hold to build me up again. I cheerfully testify that it was Postum, and Postum alone that did all this, for when I began to drink it I 'threw physic to the dogs.'" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

DID A WORLD OF GOOD

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Cure Heart Pains, Dizzy Spells and Weakness.

Easy to get, hard to get rid of; that is what most sufferers think of dyspepsia. They are astonished when their stomach begins to trouble them seriously.

They had been eating hurriedly and irregularly for a long time, to be sure, but they supposed their stomachs quite used to that.

Some people know that the strength which the weak stomach needs, and for the lack of which the whole body is suffering, can be found surely and quickly in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. In hundreds of instances these pills have succeeded where other remedies failed.

"My indigestion," said Mr. J. R. Miller, of Dayton, Va., "came in the first place from the fact that a few years ago I worked a great deal at night, and ate at any odd hour whenever the chance came, and always very hurriedly. One day I found myself a victim of terrible dyspepsia. It kept me miserable all the time for several years.

"I always had a great deal of distress after eating, and when I got up from my sleep my stomach would be so weak that it would hardly take any food. I had very uncomfortable feelings about my heart, and was dizzy and, whenever I stooped over and then straightened up, my eyes would be badly blurred.

"I read the statements of several persons who had got rid of obstinate stomach troubles by using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I bought some and they did me a world of good. They acted promptly and did just what was claimed for them. I have no more distress after meals; the bad feeling has gone from the region of my heart; the alarming dizzy spells have disappeared, and I am strong again."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists and by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

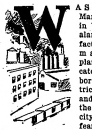
WASHINGTON LETTER

FACTORY SMOKE THREATENS TO MAR THE CITY.

THE PEOPLE ARE INDIGNANT

Congress Slow to Grant Improvements If Town Is to Become Manufacturing Place—Blunder in Decoration.



WASHINGTON.—Many good friends in Washington are alarmed by the fact that a big manufacturing plant is to be located within the borders of the District of Columbia, and just across the river from the city itself. They fear that this is the beginning of manufacturing enterprises at the capital city which will mean the defacement of its beauty and its destruction as a desirable city of residence.

The Firth-Sterling Steel company, that furnishes the greater part of the shells and projectiles used in the navy, and whose works are now located in the murky atmosphere of Pittsburg, has purchased 30 acres of land in the District opposite Washington, and proposes to locate its shell factory there. The object is to be within easy reach of the Indian Head proving grounds of the navy department, located some 20 miles down the Potomac. The establishment of this factory in the District means the use of bituminous coal and consequent clouds of smoke which are certain to mar the beauty of Washington's great public buildings and fine residences.

One of Washington's greatest charms as a residence city and as a center where the wealthy, the literary, the scientific and artistic elements of American society could find the best atmosphere has been its clear air and, in winter, its beautiful Italian blue skies. These natural beauties have been guarded jealously by congress, and stringent laws have been passed forbidding the emission of black or gray soft coal smoke from chimneys, and President Roosevelt has lent his great influence toward the enactment of these laws and toward their enforcement. It has been the purpose to keep the city clean and spotless. Big apartment houses, hotels and power houses have trenched upon the anti-smoke law, but they have been promptly fined and Washington is about as clear from soot and dirt as any city in the world.

Noble New Buildings.

NOW that a big manufacturing plant is to be located in the District, Washington will no longer be known as the "spotless town." It is generally regarded as a mistake to encourage manufacturing near the capital city. Congressmen are up in arms against this innovation. For years that body has been authorizing big public improvements and the erection of splendid governmental buildings with the object of beautifying Washington and eventually making it the finest seat of government in the world.

Mr. Babcock, of Wisconsin, who is chairman of the house committee on the District of Columbia, is very indignant at the encroachment of the big steel plant upon the exclusive capital city. "Those business men and real estate men who are inviting manufacturing plants here are making a great mistake," says Mr. Babcock. "The theory on which congress has been so liberal in public improvements in Washington has been that the city would be retained for governmental purposes and for a residence city. Big manufacuring establishments will bring to the District a class of people entirely foreign to the citizenship Washington now has. That will not be the most objectionable feature, however, as the introduction of dirt, grease and smoke will mean the destruction of the unique character of the capital of the nation.

"There are now under way public buildings and improvements representing a value approximating $50,000,000. Most of this is in the way of magnificent public buildings. The two office buildings for the house and senate will be splendid marble structures in keeping with the capitol and the new Union railroad station will be of white granite. In addition to these, there is the beautiful war college, just opposite to where this factory is to be located, the new agricultural building, the $4,000,000 structure for the Smithsonian Institution and the new municipal building for the District. This will mean a group of the finest buildings in the world whose beauty will be sadly marred by the introduction of factory smoke. Congress will go very slow in future improvements, if Washington is to be a manufacturing town."

The Brumidi Frieze.

THE joint committee on library of the two houses is again wrestling with the question of what to do with the Brumidi frieze in the rotunda of the capitol. A sub-committee consisting of Chairman McCleary and Senator Wetmore has been apopinted to consider what subjects shall be recommended for the completion of this frieze. These gentlemen are open to suggestions, and the most pertinent one that has yet been made is that the whole frieze be eliminated and the caricatures stuck up on the wall of the rotunda be wiped out and some really artistic decoration be substituted.

No one seems to know exactly who initiated the idea of putting the fresco groups of figures supposed to represent important scenes in the history of the new world, but the idea was adopted and Brumidi, an Italian artist, was given the contract. He "executed" several of these scenes, but in 1880 died, after having depicted in his style important events down to Penn's treaty with the Indians. His work was then taken up by Costaggini, another Italian, who brought the events down to the discovery of gold in California. This left two panels remaining to complete the circle, and congress has never agreed as to the subjects to fill in this space.

The figures in this fresco appear ridiculous as seen from the floor of the rotunda. They are suggestive of old-time wood cuts or the rudely executed pictures in the "Farmers' Almanac." There are impossible horses and still more impossible men in the jumble of figures. They do not appeal to the artistic sense of anyone and without a guidebook the subjects can only be guessed at. The fresco has cost a pretty sum, and the only objection to wiping the whole picture out is the fact that it has cost money. In contrast with the fine oil paintings that decorate the walls of the rotunda near the floor this fresco is very amusing.

"From Indiana."

THE state of Indiana is perhaps more thoroughly in the limelight in national affairs than any of her sister commonwealths. It is on the Hoosier contingent in congressional life that public attention is most strongly fixed at present. The prominence of her statesmen is unusual when compared with the figure that other state delegations cut in governmental affairs. First is Vice President Fairbanks, probably the leading candidate just now for the Republican presidential nomination in 1908, and he has associated with him in Washington some brilliant Indiana colleagues.

Senator Albert J. Beveridge, another Indiana boy, holds first place as orator in the senate. He has a rival in one of his colleagues in the house, James E. Watson, recently selected as the Republican "whip" in that body. Beveridge and Watson were classmates in the DePauw university during the early '80s. They were then rivals for class honors in elocution, and so close was the race that neither could be called the winner. Young Fred Landis of Indiana has added new reputation to the state by a brilliant speech in the house. Judge Crumpacker, another representative, is known throughout the land for his persistent efforts to secure representation in congress according to the number of votes cast in the states. The southern brothers regard this as a blow at them and their opposition has centered much attention upon Mr. Crumpacker.

There are other able and brilliant men in the Indiana congressional delegation and the prominence that state has achieved in national life is the result of her people sending good men to congress. There are several larger and older commonwealths that might emulate Indiana's example with advantage to their reputations.

MANY ARE KILLED IN CHURCH PANIC

RUSH IN COLORED CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA KILLS EIGHTEEN PEOPLE.

Smoke from a Trifling Fire Starts a Panic after a Revival Meeting. In a Wild Rush the Stairway Becomes Wedged.

Philadelphia, Jan. 22.—Eighteen persons were killed and probably half a hundred injured in a panic following the cry of "fire" last night in St. Paul's colored Baptist church on the west side, Poplar street and Girard avenue.

The services were being held on the second floor of the building.

A defective flue set fire to the chimney causing some smoke to issue through the crevices in the floor near the pulpit.

The room was filled at the time and the cries of "fire" coupled with the sight of the smoke threw the congregation into a panic.

A wild rush was made for the stairs, despite the efforts of Rev. E. W. Johnson, the pastor, to allay the fears of the frenzied people.

All wanted to get out at once and men, women and children alike were knocked down and trampled upon by those pushing from behind.

The stairway to the first floor had one sharp turn in it, and the people became so tightly wedged in the bend of the stairs that the frail wooden banister gave away, precipitating many to the first floor.

The crash and the screams and shrieks of the women and children added to the frenzy of those above. They did not stop in their onward rush to get out.

Notwithstanding the wide open doors on the first floor leading to the street the crush was so great that eighteen persons had the life stamped out of them before the panic was ended.

The greatest confusion reigned. Men and women ran about the streets calling for missed loved ones. A great crowd gathered and the work of rescue was promptly started. The dead and injured were quickly taken to hospitals and nearby houses.

The fire was only trifling, the flames being extinguished before the firemen arrived.

FOUGHT THE BEAR.

Loggers in St. Louis County Kill a 400-Pound Animal—None is Severely Hurt.

Duluth, Minn., Jan. 10.—A bear that was disturbed in its winter quarters under the roots of a fallen pine near Floorwood, St. Louis county, by loggers in the employ of W. G. Hammond made it lively for the men.

A man named Hans Johnson was responsible for the accident. He shoved a cant-hook into the bear's nest without a thought that it was the winter habitation of bruin. A huge black bear leaped out ahd caught hold of the terrified Johnson, and but for the help of his comrades the woodsman would have been killed.

Another man named Chris Peterson calmly hit the bear over the head with a double-bitted ax, and the other woodsmen, encouraged by this act, closed in with axes and cant-hooks and a battle royal ensued for a few minutes.

Several of the men were scratched, but none was seveely hurt. The bear was overcome by the combined assault of axes and other woodmen's weapons, and was killed. The animal weighed 400 pounds.

Increase Stock Toll.

Evarts, S. D., Jan. 22.—At a recent council of the Indians of the Cheyenne agency it was decided to increase the stock toll on cattle passing over the public trail through this agency from 25 cents to 50 cents per head, and Agent Warner and Chiefs Hump and Iron Lightning have gone to Washington for consulation with the authorities on the matter. At 25 cents per head the toll has brought the Indians an annual income of $25,000.

Crime Center.

Butte, Mont., Jan. 32.—With a six weeks' record of two murders and thirty-six hold-ups and robberies, Butte is not inclined to hurl any rocks in the direction of Chicago or any other crime-infested centers. Probably no city in the country of equal population is so infested with desperate criminals as is Butte at this time.

Officers Elected.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 22.—The North Dakota Horticultural society held its annual meeting here and elected Prof. C. B. Waldron of Fargo president and Prof. O. O. Churchill secretary. A plan was outlined for increasing the membership of the association and arousing a more general interest.

A gum shoe campaign is some times successful and the one in this part of the state is working very well, so far, but the lion is liable to shelve the shoes and show his teeth, almost any old time.

Jacobson seems to want to go into the state making business early in the season, but he will have to look out that some of his slates don't get badly smashed when the people send their delagate to that state convention.

The Polk county printers are to put in bids for doing the years job printing. It is safe to say, that one of them will get it for about half what its worth, and that the other bidders will put in the year kicking, at the county Commissioners.

E.A.Nelsen, the all-worthy statesman, and politician, of Hallock has announced himsel as a candidate for the republican nomination for secretary of state. This makes two newspaper men candidates for the same position and they both expect the support of all the boys.

They talk about the man "behind the gun,"but the man behind the type case is never mentioned, until they need them as bad as they do now to set up the States new code, which goes in affect March 1st, and owing to the printers strike there is liable to have to be an extra session of the legislature called to extend the time.

It was feared one day this week that winter had relly "set in" at last—but it rained this morning.—Thirteen Towns

Lets have no more of your defiance of the weather down theret Foss. Just see what you brough us this week. Whats wood worth in Fosston, and do the subscribers bring in lots of it?

While there is not much prospect of the Jacobson boom giving him the nomination on the republican ticket for our next governor, yet it has gone far enough so that the boomers had ought to stop and consider the position in which it would place the party, with him as their nominee. With his record on drainage it would be a campaign of defense, from start to finish, which would be very liable to land them over the fence-and-out in November.

The movement of the farmers liveing along the Red Lake river to build a boat for the purpose of carring freigh to and from Thief River Falls will be a long step toward the building up of this part of Red Lake county. There is one dificulty which they will encounter, and that is logs, for with the river as full of logs as it was at times last season it would be nearly impossiable to run a boat. But the only way for the farmers to do is to give the loging company's to understand that they will not have any more right to the use of the river than is given them by law, and no more than their share of the use of the river, and that their "bluff" to the affect, that they can do it just, because they are a CORPORATION, will be promptly called, if they get to far over the line and head off the farmers boat.

STEENERSONS BILL.

To extend the time in which purchasers under said Act of February twentieth, nineteen hundred and four, entitled "An Act to authorize the sale of part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota," may pay for the land purchased under said Act.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA IN CONGRESS ASSEMBLED.

That in all cases where the rights of a purchaser of land under the Act of February twentieth, nineteen hundred and four, entitled "An Act to authorize the sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota," have become or shall hereafter become liable to forfeiture by failure to pay the amount required by said Act upon his purchase, if such purchaser or his heirs shall within one year after such default pay the sum due together with the interest thereon at the rate of five per centum per annum from date when due to date of payment, such payment shall operate as a redemption of the rights of such purchaser or his heirs, and the same shall by such payment be restored the same as if no default had occured.

A Caustic Tongue.

Years ago a prominent citizen of Chicago, who at that time was president of one of its leading clubs, in introducing another prominent citizen as a speaker at a club banquet dwelt in highly complimentary terms on the latter's efforts to bring about political reforms. "Gentlemen," he said, "no one in this city exerts a more powerful influence for good than does Mr. Blank when he is sober." Then in great confusion and amid an awed silence he hastened to explain that Mr. Blank exerted, as he had intended to say, a powerful influence when he was in earnest.

At the banquet given at the opening of the present Board of Trade building the elder Carter Harrison made a flamboyant speech congratulating himself on having been born in the same year that the steam locomotive was invented. He was followed by the late Emery Storrs, who said that, most appropriately, Carter Harrison and the locomotive were born in the same year since both of them had been blowing off steam ever since.

It was Emery Storrs who said that a fellow lawyer reminded him of a beautiful house with massive portals and impressive cornices, which, when you opened the front door, landed you immediately in the back yard.

Duplicates.

Smythe—Remember when Chatto was married last year how he kicked about the duplicate wedding presents? Browne—Yes. Smythe—Well, that sort of luck seems to follow him. He had a somewhat similar complaint yesterday. Browne—What was it? Smythe—Duplicate birthday presents. That is to say, twins.

Woes of Wealth.

"Wealth has its penalties," said the philosopher.

"Yes," answered Mr. Cumrox. "It's pretty hard for a man to have to go guessing through a French menu when he would rather have pork and beans."—Washington Star.

The Poor Printer.

One of Browning's remarks is characteristic. He once said to Dr. Knight that "all the unintelligibility of 'Sordello' is due to the printers. They would change my punctuation and not print my commas, semicolons, dashes and brackets."

DEATH OF KNUT KROSTUE.

Communicated.

A week ago last Wednesday, occured the sudden death of one of the blooming youths of Garnes Knut S. Krostue. He was sick in bed but three days, when the reaper of death made its final call. Lung fever was the cause of his death. Knut was a bright young man, full of life and vigor, was now basking in the sunshine of his twenty third year only. Knut leaves an aged father and mother, and two brothers together with a host of freinds and relatives, that will ever mourn his untimely departure, and his loved ones will always behold his vacant chair. Sad, to sad indeed. In words alone, we cannot satisfy the griefs of that weeping mother, but in her tears, let us hope that she finds joy. They have indeed the sympathy of the entire community.

AWAKENED BY HUNGRY WOLVES

Youths Were Disturbed In Their Slumber by Bites of Ravenous Animals.

Wolves have increased to an alarming extent in the hunting districts of Canada. Hitherto it has been considered safe in the early autumn to lie down and sleep wherever the night might overtake one, but two young fellows who wanted to shirk a long walk to camp and went to sleep beside a deer path have learned a different lesson.

It was a dark and windy, but warm, night, and they did not start a fire. They were awakened early in the night by the onset of three wolves, which seized one by the leg and the other by the shoulder with sufficient force to bring the blood.

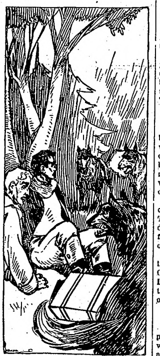
Their shouts and struggles seemed to shock the brutes, whose grip relaxed so that they were able to shake themselves free. The cooler of the two was able to seize his rifle, and this he fired from his hip in the direction of the assailants. From the fact that what looked like spots of blood were discovered on a flat rock near by next morning the young men judged that the shot reached one of the wolves. But at the time they were amazed at the stillness which succeeded the report. Not a rustle or the snap of a twig could they hear, yet when a white birch was touched with a match and a shaft of fire shot up the trunk there was not a sign of a wolf.

The young men were thankful to have escaped being torn to pieces by the ravenous animals.

It is feared that the same good fortune has not attended a young man supposed to have come from the western states who went to the woods with Eli Baudette. He was a tall fellow of twenty or twenty-one, was well supplied with money and gave the guide only his Christian name, Frank.

It was his first visit to the Canadian woods. Baudette refused to do any jacking or night hunting of any description for the first week of the trip, and one morning when he sat up he found himself alone in the little lean-to. His charge had taken his rifle and cartridges and set out alone, probably hours before. He has not been seen since.

The young man had a compass and knew how to use it. Old Baudette had told him what to do in case he should lose himself. Game is plentiful, and the cartridge vest he carried was well filled. There are no dangerous streams to cross nor bad bog holes, and it is difficult to account for his disappearance except on the supposition that wild animals got him.



THEY WERE AWAKENED BY THE ONSET OF THREE WOLVES.

That wolves are numerous in that part of the country some men who joined the search for the missing man realized when they were crouching under cover beside a lake, waiting for a swimming deer to land. As she came near it was noticed that a strong young one was swimming alongside, its little head sometimes resting on its mother's neck. Gaining rapidly upon them as they plunged forward were five wolves, two of them only half grown.

The Sentiment of Pottery.

Pottery is not only associated with the material necessities of man, but also with his feelings and affections and from the most ancient times has been used to commemorate some momentous event in his career. An early British urn speaks to us of death and mysterious burial rites; a cradle of brown clay recalls the christening festivities of the seventeenth century. The potter has always taken a pleasure in putting his best work on presents intended for his friends. In France, on the morning that followed a wedding, an ecuelle, or covered bowl with two handles, was always offered by the guests to the married couple. In England, on the occasion of the birth of a first child, a cradle made of clay or precious material was presented to the parents.

CIRCUS PERFORMERS.

To Them the Circus Is a Very Serious Affair.

To circus people the circus is a very serious thing. When a bareback rider slips to the ground after a somersault or a lofty tumbler misses the shoulder it is his business to land on the audience is all sympathy, as if feeling itself how it is to fall before so many people. Very little the performer cares for all the vast multitude. His mind is on the superintendent, his particular superintendent, who is watching him at the side of the arena, and who, when he goes off, is sure to ask very pointedly how his eye happened to be inaccurate or his muscles infirm. There is no place in the circus for performers who fall.

Even the clowns look a little bit serious behind the scenes. But perhaps that is only because the black lines they paint on their whitened visages are always so glum and solemn. And what a wilderness of fun making people there are in the latter day circus—the Bumpkin, the Loon, the Harlequin, the Grimacer, the Merry Andrew, the Austrian Looby, the Zany, the Pierrot, the Punch, the Motley Fool and finally the German Broad Face, whose name is Puddy Burke! One of the clowns was sitting on his trunk in the dressing room licking a stick of black paint and rubbing it on his cheeks so as to make a most funereal expression. The small boy asked him what kind of a clown he was. He said that he was just "Funny Friskey," and he got his visiting card out of his trunk. It read, "H. Friskey, Clown and Comedian," and it had a heavy gold rim, which made it very imposing. In the four corners it said Europe and Asia and Africa and America, which showed that H. Friskey's fame had reached the four corners of the card. Until you saw his merry capers in the ring you never could believe that a man with such a serious face and such an imposing visiting card could be either funny or frisky.—Metropolitan Magazine.

TRUTH OR PARADOX?

Life levels all men; death reveals the eminent.

Liberty means responsibility. That is why most men dread it.

While we have prisons it matters little which of us occupy the cells.

Democracy substitutes election by the incompetent many for appointment by the corrupt few

Do not do unto others as you would that they should do unto you. Their tastes may not be the same.

Your word can never be as good as your bond, because your memory can never be as trustworthy as your honor.

If you strike a child take care that you strike it in anger, even at the risk of maiming it for life. A blow in cold blood neither can nor should be forgiven.—From George Bernard Shaw's "Man and Superman."

Puzzled by the Law.

The librarian of the Congressional library tells a story of a colored man who came into the library and asked one of the assistants for a "good law book." He explained that one of his neighbors intended to sue him and he wanted to get a book so he could find out the law.

The clerk gave him a copy of a book called "Every Man His Own Lawyer." The colored man sat down at one of the desks and turned the pages of the book for an hour. Then he came to the desk of the assistant and said:

"'Deed, boss, cain't you git me sumpin' easier? Dis yere is d' fifth edition. Cain't I have de fust edition? Mebbe I c'u'd understan' dat. I ain't bin gittin' on right smart with dis yere fifth one."—Baltimore News.

The Tools of Genius.

Some of the greatest discoveries in physics and chemistry have been made with the simplest forms of apparatus and under the most modest conditions of laboratory equipment. One need only recall the achievements of the famous John Dalton and in later time of Sir Gabriel Stokes to illustrate the point. As regards the latter, a comment of Lord Rayleigh is of interest. Stokes' experimental work, he says, was executed with the most modest appliances. Many of his discoveries were made in a narrow passage behind the pantry of his house, into the window of which he had a shutter fixed with a slit in it and a bracket on which to place crystals and prisms.—London Telegraph.

A Nocturne

"You will have to accompany me," said the new and zealous officer of the law, laying a firm hand on the arm of the seedy young man who was making night hideous with a cornet.

"Certainly," said the musician, affectionately linking his arm in the policeman's. "What do you wish to sing and in what key?"

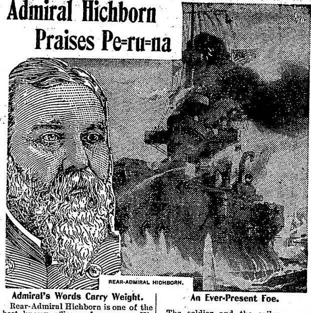
Admiral Hichborn Praises Pe-ru-na



REAR-ADMIRAL HICHBORN.

Admiral's Words Carry Weight.

Rear-Admiral Hichborn is one of the best known officers of our navy. His statements concerning Peruna will have much weight as they go out in the world. What he says is echoed by many other officers of high standing.

What the Admiral Says.

Philip Hichborn, Rear-Admiral of the U. S. Navy, Washington, D. C., writes:

"After the use of Peruna for a short period, I can now cheerfully recommend your valuable remedy to any one who is in need of an invigorating tonic."—Philip Hichborn.

An Ever-Present Foe.

The soldier and the sailor are especially subject to catarrh. In the barracks and on the field, Peruna is found equally efficacious to overcome this physical enemy. If taken in time, it will prevent colds from developing into catarrh. Even after a cold has settled in some organ of the body, Peruna can be relied upon as an efficacious remedy to promptly overcome it.

Peruna will relieve catarrh, whether acute or chronic, but a few doses of it taken in the first stages of the disease will be more effective than when the disease has become established.

TWENTY YEARS OF IT.

Emaciated by Diabetes; Tortured With Gravel and Kidney Pains.

Henry Soule, cobbler, of Hammondsport, N. Y., says: "Since Doan's Kidney Pills cured me eight years ago, I've reached 70 and hope to live many years longer. But twenty years ago I had kidney trouble so bad I could not work. Backache was persistent and it was agony to lift anything. Gravel, whirling headaches, dizziness and terrible urinary disorders ran me down from 168 to 100 pounds.

Doctors told me I had diabetes and could not live. I was wretched and hopeless when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, but they cured me eight years ago and I've been well ever since."

NOT LIKELY TO ESCAPE.

Sarcophagus Was Heavy Enough to Hold Remains of Napoleon Down.

Henry Vignaud, secretary of the American embassy at Paris, enjoys telling of an American who was being shown the tomb of Napoleon, relates Success Magazine. As the loquacious guide referred to the various points of interest in connection with the tomb, the American evinced the greatest interest in all that was said.

"This immense sarcophagus," declaimed the guide, "weighs 40 tons. Inside of that, sir, is a steel receptacle weighing 12 tons, and inside of that is a leaden casket, hermetically sealed, weighing over two tons. Inside of that rests a mahogany coffin containing the remains of the great man."

For a moment the American was silent, as if in deep meditation. Then he said: "It seems to me that you've got him all right. If he ever gets out, cable me at my expense."

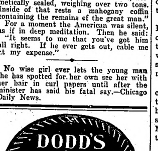
DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS



NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Prize Apples.

Minneapolis—Apple raising will experience an unprecedented boom throughout the Northwest within the next few years if the efforts of the Minnesota State Horticultural society meets with success. In order to encourage the growing of apple seedlings the society has decided to offer five annual premiums of $100 each for the best winter seedling apples keeping at least until March 1 under ordinary cellar conditions and from trees planted during the coming spring.

The awards will be made in 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915 and 1916 and the territory included in the offer is a large one, for competition is open to anyone residing in the Western half of Wisconsin, the two northern tiers of counties of Iowa, all of Minnesota, South Dakota, North Dakota and Manitoba.

Several other rules governing this contest were passed by the society—one requiring that the entry for competition for this premium must be made within one year after the planting of the seed, while the contestant must state when and where the seed was planted, the variety of apple from which the seed was taken and where the apple was grown.

Only seedlings grown from seed taken from apples which were raised within the limits assigned for the contest will be eligible for competion.

Nearly Fatal.

Mankato.—Adam Johnson, eighty-eight years old, a pioneer resident of Granby township, almost lost his life by an unusual incident. He recently became a resident of North Mankato.

While coming from the cellar with a jar of preserves, Mr. Johnson tripped and fell. The fruit jar was shattered and one of the jagged pieces of glass pnetrated his wrist, severing a large artery, and causing an alarming loss of blood. It was some time before the the accident was discovered and life was nearly extinct before a physician arrived. After working over him for several hours, the physician succeeded in partially reviving the aged man, and announced that they are hopeful of his recovery.

Heavy Tonnage.

Duluth.—Maj Charles L. Potter, United States engineer in charge of Lake Superior, issued his annual report of the Duluth-Superior harbor, and all Minnesota and Wisconsin people, he declares will take pride in it.

The freight movement during 1905 was 22,576,145 net tons of a total value of $193,751, 584. This is an increase of 36½ per cent over the receipts and shipments in 1904 and the increase of valuation is more than $38,000,000. The increase in net freight tons for the harbor last year was 69.6 per cent over 1890.

Major Pottor says in his report that considering the mean monthly freight movement during the season of navigation, the Duluth-Superior practically stands next to New York.

Riot Call.

Duluth.—A riot call summoned the Hibbing police to the Utica mine location, where they found that a desperate fight between the three Austrian factions there had resulted in the fatal stabbing of Tony Bertoglatti, who is now in a hospital with eleven stab wounds. Eleven arrests have been made, all of the prisoners Austrians.

Angello Jaensetti and Mary Berdo were married at the mine location, and one faction was represented among the guests and the other two were not. The latter butted in and a riot followed.

News Notes.

Rochester—The home of Roy Bird on East College street was burned to the ground. The fire was caused by the the breaking of a lamp. Bird hardly escaped with his child, his wife being at the revival meeting. Nothing was saved.

Mankato—Mrs. Henrietta Schlegel struck by the incoming Great Western passenger train while walking on the tracks, and sustained injuries that may prove fatal. It was necessary to amputate one leg, and one wrist was broken, besides other injuries received. Mrs, Schlegel was sixty years of age, is deaf and did not hear the train approaching, although it whistled loudly.

Moorhead—Petitions have been filed with the county auditor for the establishment of three more drainage districts in the northern part of Clay county. The board will meet on Feb. 13 to hear the petitions and to take steps necessary to the establishment of the districts and the construction of the ditches.

Red Wing—The case of the city of Red Wing against George Kidder of La Crosse, charged with violating the peddlers' ordinance of Red Wing, will be dropped, as City Attorney Wilson is of the opinion that the arrested man was a solicitor and not a peddler.

Red Wing—Despite the unfavorable condition of the track, the annual tournament of the Aurora Ski club, held here, was very successful and some good records were made. Ole Mangseth, entered in Class A, made the longest standing jump, 102 feet.

Winona—A movement looking toward the better enforcement of law and order in the city has been begun. The object is to form a Law and Order league, and Right Rev. Bishop Cotter of the Catholic diocese of Winona has consented to head the movement and has accepted the office of titular president of the league.

Minneapolis—A syndicate of Minnesota capitalists left for the Bahama islands where they have secured an option on about 300,000 acres of timber lands. They have a mill established on Abaco Island and propose to go into manufacturing on a larger scale.

PAIN IN THE JOINTS

Rheumatic Tortures Cease When Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Make New Blood.

The first sign of rheumatism is frequently a pain and swelling in one of the joints. If not combated in the blood, which is the seat of the disease, the poison spreads, affecting other joints and tissues. Sometimes rheumatism attacks the heart and is quickly fatal.

The one remedy that has cured rheumatism so that it stays cured is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills expel the poison from the blood and restore the system, so that the poisonous matter is passed off as nature intended.

Mrs. I. T. Pitcher, of No 130 Monmouth street, Newark, N. J., suffered for about three years from rheumatism before she found this cure She says: "It began with a queer feeling in my fingers. In a little time it seemed as though the finger joints had lumps on them and I could not get my gloves on.

"Then it grew worse and spread to my knees. I could not stand up and I could not sleep nights. My suffering was more than I can describe. I took a great deal of medicine, but nothing even gave me relief until I tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"I read an account of a cure in a case that was exactly like mine and my husband got me some of the pills. I took them for three weeks before I really felt better but they finally cured me."

Mr Pitcher, who is a veteran and a member of E. D Morgan Post, No. 307 of New York, substantiates his wife's statement and says that she now walks without difficulty, whereas a year ago he was compelled to push her about in a wheeled chair. Both Mr. and Mrs. Pitcher are enthusiastic in their praise of Dr Williams' Pink Pills.

SORES ON HANDS.

"For a long time I suffered with sores on the hands which were itching, painful, and disagreeable. I had three doctors and derived no benefit from any of them. One doctor said he was afraid to touch my hands, so you must know how bad they were; another said I never could be cured; and the third said the sores were caused by the dipping of my hands in water in the dye-house where I work. I saw in the papers about the wonderful cures of the Cuticura Remedies and procured some of the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. In three days after the application of the Cuticura Ointment my hands began to peel and were better. The soreness disappeared, and they are now smooth and clean, and I am still working in the dye-house. Mrs. A. E. Maurer, 2340 State St., Chicago, Ill., July 1, 1905."

A TRULY IDEAL WIFE

HER HUSBAND'S BEST HELPER

Vigorous Health Is the Great Source of Power to Inspire and Encourage—All Women Should Seek It.

One of the most noted, successful and richest men of this century, in a recent article, has said, "Whatever I am and whatever success I have attained in this world I owe all to my wife. From the day I first knew her she has been an inspiration, and the greatest helpmate of my life."

Mrs. Bessie Ainsley

To be such a successful wife, to retain the love and admiration of her husband, to inspire him to make the most of himself, should be a woman's constant study.

If a woman finds that her energies are flagging, that she gets easily tired, dark shadows appear under her eyes, she has backache, headaches, bearing-down pains, nervousness, irregularities or the blues, she should start at once to build up her system by a tonic with specific powers, such as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Following we publish by request a letter from a young wife:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"Ever since my child was born I have suffered, as I hope few women ever have, with inflammation, female weakness, bearing-down pains, backache and wretched headaches. It affected my stomach so I could not enjoy my meals, and half my time was spent in bed.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman, and I feel so grateful that I am glad to write and tell you of my marvelous recovery. It brought me health, new life and vitality."—Mrs. Bessie Ainsley, 611 South 10th Street, Tacoma, Wash.

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Ainsley it will do for every sick and ailing woman.

If you have symptoms you don't understand write to Mrs. Pinkham, daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free and always helpful.

PHILIPPINE BILL IN TROUBLE

STRONG OPPOSITION TO MEASURE IN THE SENATE.

Bill is Likely to be Changed Before it is Reported From the Committee.

Washington, Jan. 29.—The present status of the Phillippine tariff bill is worrying friends of the administration. It is freely predicted by many prominent leaders that the pending bill will never be reported from the senate Philippines committee but will die a painless death.

This is vigorously denied by Senator Lodge, the chairman of the commitee. He says the bill must be modified to meet certain objections and that it will be reported. The preponderance of sentiment is that a report will be made.

Senator Dick has been credited with holding the balance of power in the committee, but this is doubtful. The committee comprises thirteen members, six of them being aligned on each side, with Mr. Dick not yet committed. As a matter of fact, Senators Dick, Stone and Culberson are all undecided as to the attitude they will assume.

There is pronounced hostility to the Philippine tariff bill as it stands, both in and out of the committee. Senators Hale, Burrows and Brandegee are opposed to it because it damages the beet sugar and tobacco interests. Senators Lodge and Beveridge favor it.

Further hearings will be held before any efforts are made to secure a report. Many changes will be suggested and some made. It is believed a report will then be possible.

Dynamite in School.

Eldora, Iowa, Jan. 29.—Ten sticks of dynamite and two foils of fuse constitute a peculiar find made by children who were pupils in Linn township No. 2 country school in Marshall county, south of Eldora. The explosives were found in an old shoe which was hidden away in some rubbish behind some old shelving at the schoolhouse. Mice had been working away at the box and nearly had gnawd their way to the dynamite. It is presumed that burglars selected the school building as a good place to secrete the dangerous stuff. Had the dynamite exploded during the school session it would have wrecked the schoolhouse and killed every person in the building.

Victim of Fued.

Bismarck, N. D., Jan. 29.—Having pleaded guilty to the charge of slaughtering two beeves belonging to a cattleman in Billings county, Moses La Rue has been sentenced to two years and three months in the penitentiary.

La Rue claims to be a victim of the feud between the cattle and sheep raisers. He owned a small band of sheep in Billings county and was struggling to eke out a living. He says he had trouble with a cattle man and one night his sheep were shot and killed. He alleges that that this was done by cattle men and that in reprisal he killed the first cattle that came his way.

Blown Through Windows.

Esterville, Iowa, Jan. 29.—Three men were hurt as a result of a gasoline lamp explosion in a billiard hall at Wallingford, and the entire front of the building was blown out.

J. S. Ward was severely burned about the head and body, but will recover. Peter Larson was severely injured and James Koss, son of the postmaster, was blown through the large glass front of the billiard hall and seriously injured.

Approriation Bill Passed.

Washington, Jan 29.—In a sesssion of two hours Saturday the house passed the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, carrying $15,216,103, incorporated in which is a provision that the eight-hour law shall not apply to alien laborers on the Panama canal.

In addition it passed 261 private pension bills and read the Mann general bridge bill.

Coming Again.

London, Jan. 29.—According to the Observer, Sir Thomas Lipton is preparing to challenge again for the Amerier's cup and is anxious to issue formal invitation to the New York yacht club to engage in another deep-sea contest for the world famed yachting trophy.

Four Injured.

Abbotsford, Wis., Jan. 29.—Four men were injured when a flanger going south was thrown by a misplaced switch upon a track leading to the roundhouse. Before the snowplow could be stopped it collided with a switch engine standing noor the coal chute.

Burned.

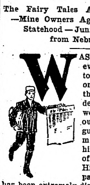
Newport, R. I., Jan. 29.—Seven buildings, connected with the United States naval training station at Coaster's Harbor Island, in this city were destroyed by fire Sunday night, causing an estimated loss of $10,000. The detention building and some smaller buildings were destroyed.

WASHINGTON LETTER

PRESIDENT TAKES AMERICAN PEOPLE INTO CONFIDENCE.

PANAMA CANAL PUBLICITY

The Fairy Tales About Lobbying —Mine Owners Against Arizona Statehood — Junior Senator from Nebraska.

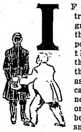


WASHINGTON. — If every rumor were to be believed that one hears about the capitol, President Roosevelt would be left without a corporal's guard of statesmen supporting him before the end of this congress. His independent, patriotic course has been extremely distasteful to many congressmen whose ideas of statesmanship seldom go beyond the matter of patronage. Men who, like Senator Scott, of West Virginia, play politics all the time and whose first question regarding a public measure is what will its effect be upon the party, do not like Roosevelt.

The president's enemies are making a great deal of noise just now and his friends are keeping comparatively quiet, knowing that the noise will do no harm and all the criticism of the president will be fully answered by the latter's actions. When the time comes the president's champions in both house and senate will see to it that he gets all the defense that is needed. The president, however, has a way of meeting criticism himself.

But this policy of meeting criticism of the president has followed very effectively in the case of the Panama canal. He has sent to congress every scrap of information and every line of record of the transactions of the Panama commission and has told congress that the reports he has transmitted meet every criticism and attack that has been made upon the commission and upon the work done by the government in Panama. He has followed his policy of publicity and has taken the whole American people into his confidence in his discussion and explanation of what has been done toward the construction of the Panama canal.

The Lobbyist.

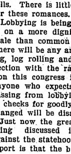


IF ALL reports are true this will be a great congress for the lobbyist. The popular idea of that individual, the "member of the third house" as he is fond of calling himself, is not an accurate one. Stories have been written about smooth-tongued individuals, men with pockets stuffed with $100 and $1,000 bills and beautiful, engaging women, filling the corridors of the house and senate and reaching the members in their committee rooms, there to effect arrangements, financial or otherwise, for the members' support or opposition to certain legislation. There are fairy tales about gorgeous banquets being given, where costly wines are served and the befuddled congressman seduced into pledges of support for questionable bills. There is little or no foundation for these romances.

Lobbying is being carried on, but it is on a more dignified and extensive scale than common reports suggest. There will be any amount of wire pulling, log rolling and lobbying in connection with the railway rate legislation this congress is considering, but anyone who expects to detect money passing from lobbyist to congressman or checks for goodly amounts thus exchanged will be disappointed.

Just now the greatest lobby that is being discussed is that operating against the statehood of Arizona. The report is that the big mine owners in that territory are too well content with existing conditions to want statehood.

Senator Burkett.



SENATOR ELMER J. Burkett, of Nebraska, is the "kid" of the senate. He is the only member of that honorable body who was born after the civil war. Both Beveridge and Bailey were born during the civil war, the former in 1862 and the latter in 1863, but Mr. Burkett did not see the light of day until 1867. He is young enough to be the grandson of Senator Pettus, of Alabama, who is just 46 years older than the new senator from Nebraska.

Mr. Burkett is an enthusiast on basebass. He hasn't played the game very much in recent years, but when he was a young man at college and even after he graduated he was one of the best baseball catchers there was west of the Mississippi. He was a member of a celebrated ball team of Council Bluffs, Ia., which went up against some of the strongest nines in the country. Burkett was catcher for his team and was considered one of its strong men. In the days when this team was in its glory the Union Pacific railroad used to bring big professional aggregations from all over the country to play with the Council Bluffs nine, usually at Omaha or some place in Nebraska where large crowds would be attracted and the railroads reap a benefit from carrying them. The celebrated Athletics of Philadelphia was one of the clubs imported.

The junior senator from Nebraska gave up baseball when his team visited Fremont, Neb., and every member of it, with the exception of Burkett, fell under the influence of Nebraska firewater. After that young Burkett concluded that he would devote himself to law and politics. He finally made the latter a specialty and became a candidate for congress. He declared that he would make a profession of politics, as it is just as clean and honorable as any other profession.

Changes in the Senate.

THERE have been many ravages in the senate and several historic changes have been made during the past few years. In that brief time the following distinguished members of the upper house have passed away: Hoar, of Massachusetts; Hanna, of Ohio; Quay, of Pennsylvania; Hayley and Platt, of Connecticutt; Bate, of Tennessee, and Mitchell, of Oregon. Senator Fairbanks went from the floor of the chamber to be presiding officer of the senate as vice president of the United States. Senators Bard, of California; Ball, of Delaware; McComas, of Maryland; Cockrell, of Missouri; Stewart, of Nevada; Gibson, of Montana; Dietrich, of Nebraska, and Quarles, of Wisconsin, who were here two years ago, were not reelected.

A number of very prominent men have been elected in the place of those who died or failed of reelection. Mr. Carter, a former senator of Montana, comes again from that state. He is one of the best debaters in the senate and will do much to uphold the reputation of the northwest. Rayner, who succeeds McComas from Maryland, was formerly a member of the house and is known as one of the most eloquent men in public life. He has already made his maiden speech in the senate and charmed every one who heard him with his beautiful diction and his eloquent tongue. Mr. Crane, who succeeds Mr. Hoar of Massachusetts, is a very quiet gentleman, but a man of great force. He is bound to take high rank in the national councils of the Republican party and he is said to be gifted with a political acumen not inferior to that of the late Mark Hanna.

AN INGENIOUS compiler of incidents and statistics has presented some curious and interesting facts about the United States senate, among which the following are enumerated: There are two senators over 80 years of age, Pettus and Morgan; there are three over 75, Allison, Teller and Cullom, and four over 70, Frye, Proctor, Platt and Depew. There are 14 over 65; 10 over 60, 28 over 50, 18 over 40 and one under 40. The term "junior" and "senior" senator does not go according to age, as, for instance, the junior senator from Tennessee is 17 days the senior of the senior senator from that state.

An odd coincidence is that Beveridge, of Indiana, and Bailey, of Texas, have the same birth date, October 6. Senator Pettus is the only veteran of the war with Mexico in congress and for the first time since the cival war the veterans of the confederate army in the senate outnumber the veterans of the union army. The confederate veterans are: Pettus, Morgan, Berry, Mallory, Taliaferro, Bacon, Blackburn, McCreary, McEnery, Money, McLaurin, Daniel and Martin. The union veterans are: Alger, Burrows, Nelson, Warner, Foraker, Proctor, Scott, Spooner and Warren.

The highest ranking ex-soldier is Senator Alger, who was a brevet major-general in the union army. Senators Morgan and Pettus were brigadier generals, Morgan of cavalry and Pettus of infantry. McCreary, Money and Proctor were colonels. Burrows, Daniel and Spooner were majors. Taliaferro, McLaurin and Martin were privates.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

There is one suspicious circumstance about Jacobson as a candidate for governor, and that is that he is being supported by the Eastman line of newspapers.

The Democratic press gleefully refers to the wrangles in the Republican party largely over the spoils. They should take no unction to their souls, as the sparring only keeps us in condition for the larger battle with the enemy, when we come together in a common cause.

After the splendid majority given Roosevelt by the voters of Minnesta last election, we can hardly understand how any of Minnesota's representatives in congress can be anti, Roosevelt and still claim to represent their constituents.-Plummer Pioneer.

Thats about what we thought Charles, that it was getting about time for you to start diging that hole to crawl out of.

We arise to inquire of Lieutenant Estman of the Thief River Falls News, in what year one Tom Olson Maanum, who is publishing his notice to make final proof in that paper, is going to make his proof As the notice is being published in one of the "trio" papers (that never make a mistake), Captain Carr may have got a new rouling, to the affect, that it did not make any differece whether the notice was published corectly or not, if it was published in one of the "trio" papers.

There are few closer students of human life than President Roosevelt. Referring to the value of newspapers and what gives their standing in a community he said; "A man who has no enemies is not much of a man. A newspaper which is not hated and abused is not loved and followed. When a newspaper has followed the direct line of right and treuth until it has raised so many passions that some curse, and others bless it, that newspape has found the true diplomacy and not only does this idea apply to politics, but to thoes greater problems which come to men and newspapers We must deal with affairs of every nature and through it all show bright and clear and unbroken the line of charactor."

EDDY FOR GOVERNOR.

Country editors over 100 strong are attempting to force Frank Eddy into the gubernatorial race. A club has been formed at Warroad called the "Eddy club" and boasts 130 members C. A Moody, editor of the Plain Dealer of Warroad is authority for the statement that the democrats led by F. A. Day are attempting to sidetrack Eddy, as they believe he is the most formidable candidate the Republicans have.

"I am not authorized to speak for Mr. Eddy "said Mr. Moody "but Eddy would be a candidate if he sees there is any show. The democrats have circulated the report that he would not be a candidate with malice afore thought. They want to see Jacobson nominated, as they think he is an easier man to beat.

"Anyone who studies the state press can see that more than 100 sheets are for Eddy. This is making the democrats sit up and look—hence F. A. Days clever move to side track Eddy."-Crookston Daily Journal.

FRANK M. EDDY

Hon. F. M. Eddy the ex-congressman from the old 7th, district is coming to be recognized as the candidate of the country editors, as their next nominee on the repubican ticket for governor. They want him because there is not a republican in the State of Minnesota that can give a valid reason for not voting for him, and all we want is the republican vote, that voted for Roosevelt, and let the democrats vote for Johnson.

Anxious.

"I hear that your wife has run away from you?"

"Yes. I've offered a reward for her capture, dead or alive."

"How much?"

"Ten dollars alive and a thousand dollars dead."—Judge.

Nilsson and Patti.

When Christine Nilsson, the great singer, was asked her opinion of various singers, she gave it very candidly of every one, including herself and Mme. Albani, but she never once alluded to Mme. Patti.

"You have not mentioned Mme. Patti," remarked the pertinacious interviewer.

"No," said Mme. Nilsson, "I have not. You are asking about singers. I do not regard Patti as a singer. I place her among the angels. A Patti only comes to a planet once during that planet's existence." Such an absence of stage jealousy has probably never been equaled.

Date Mark a Bagdad Malady.

Bagdad date mark is the name given to a mysterious disease that attacks nearly every one who stays in Bagdad for any length of time and is found also at Aleppo and other places in Turkish Asia. It is a sore that comes only once, but lasts a year, leaving a scar the shape of a date. Nearly all the natives are marked with it. No remedy has been found for it, but hyposulphite of soda seems to have some effect on the mark.

The Beauty of the Lilies.

"Er—Miss Hardy—Grace—do you not think that these valley lilies are very beautiful?"

"Not so beautiful as orange blossoms, Mr. Jones."

And, thus assisted and encouraged, he presently drifted out upon the wide, wide sea of wedded bliss.

Intimation.

"So the insolent fellow refused to pay his rent?"

"He did not say so in words, but he intimated it."

"How so?"

"He kicked me downstairs."—Paris Journal.

The Merit of Good Work.

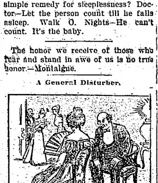
The great thing is to produce nothing of which, if it comes into broad light, you will be ashamed, and then whether it does come into broad light or no need not much trouble you.—Matthew Arnold.

A Desperate Case.

Walk O. Nights—Doctor, what is a simple remedy for sleeplessness? Doctor—Let the person count till he falls asleep. Walk O. Nights—He can't count. It's the baby.

The honor we receive of those who fear and stand in awe of us is no true honor.—Montaigne.

A General Disturber.



She—Mrs. Neverest just told me she had been away for complete rest.

He—Well, I hope no one else has been to the same place on that errand.—Judy.

Sweeping.

"I was just telling my daughter," said Mrs. Nexdore, "that it's a shame of her to play the piano on Sunday."

"Huh!" exclaimed Mrs. Peppery. "Why Sunday especially?"

A Two Edged Cure.

A story is told of the wonderful cure from deafness of a patient who was recommended to hear a Wagner opera and to sit near the orchestra by the trombones. The physician accompanied his patient and sat beside him. Suddenly, while the crash of the instruments was at its loudest, the deaf man found he could hear. "Doctor," he almost shrieked, "I can hear!" The doctor gave no sign that he noticed the remark. "I tell you, doctor," repeated the patient in ecstasy, "you have saved me! I have recovered my hearing." Still the physician was silent. He had become deaf himself.—Harper's Weekly.

Eyeglasses and Romance.

It is curious to observe that even the greatest realists do not venture to bestow eyeglasses on their heroines. It is rather odd, too, seeing how many charming women do in real life wear them and are not debarred by them from the most dramatic careers and the most poignant emotions, but while the modern novelist has bestowed eyeglasses on everybody else he has not yet had the hardihood to put them on the nose of his heroine. McIntosh Times: Deer so numerous in Red Lake county that the settlers have to sit up nights to watch their hay and it is expected that a number of them will have good sized claims against the State game warden for hay which has been distroyed by his pets.

After waiting patiently for two months for our school board to "figure" on building a school house in this district the voters have called a special meeting to be held at Kuehnel on Feb. 10th. and will attend to getting a move on the building of that school house, at once.

If you want to see the opinion John Estman, of the Thief River News has of you and the country, ask to see the copy of his affidavit on file in this office. We are going to have it framed, and hung on the wall, and one of our subscribers suggests that we use "skunk skin" for trimming up the frame.

NEWS FROM RHODA.

Thor O. Moen, made a flying trip to Gully, last Friday, and retuned on Saturday, with a load of lumber.

Olaf Snobeck, moved into his new house with his family, last Friday.

Knut Olson, started to build on Rev. Mostue's barn last Monday, and will soon have it ready for use.

DONT fail to show up at the Creamery Meeting, that is to be held at Rhoda, on February, the 3rd, at 1 o'clock p. m. This meeting will be largely attended, as every one you speak to, in this vicinity seems to favor the proposition very much and think that this is the right road to success.

Rev. Mostue, from Wisconsin will hold religious services at Thor Moen's place on Sunday Feb'y. the 4th., at the usual hour.

Tarje Lofthus, killed a large wolf last Saturday. This makes the third scalp that has been presented to the Town Clerk of Deer Park for bounty.

Inside ten days it is claimed, the much talked about rialroad question will be a settled matter. It seems as if everybody thinks that the railroad is coming their way, well, we are not much on the guess, but we are not afraid to bet our "boots" that the railroad will not be beyond plain view of the city of Rhoda.

Webster's Tiresome Habit.

Senator Hoar in his "Reminiscences" says that Daniel Webster had a tiresome habit in his public speeches of groping after the most suitable words after this fashion: "Why is it, Mr Chairman, that there has gathered, congregated; this great number of inhabitants, dwellers, here; that these roads, avenues, routes of travel; highways, converge, meet, come together here?" When the speech was printed all the synonyms but the best one would be left out.

An Innocent Gambler.

"Cheyenne was a wide open town in the old days, and every hotel and bar had its little faro game and roulette wheel and stud poker game," said a man who was there. "Our party was staying at the Inter Ocean hotel. A long, loose jointed Missourian ambled in one night and butted into the poker game. There were two or three card sharps at the table, and every citizen carried his shooting iron. This long Missourian looked rather easy, but before he had been playing an hour he was $1,500 to the good. John Chase, proprietor of the hotel, became interested and watched the game. In a few moments he saw the Missourian turn a trick that was not strictly according to Hoyle, and he called the Missourian outside.

"'Now, see here,' said Chase, 'I want to warn you. You'd better be pretty careful. Those fellows are all professional gamblers and are armed to the teeth. You don't seem to realize what you're doing.'

"'Say,' replied the long Missourian, with a look of childlike innocence, 'are they cheating me?'"—San Francisco Chronicle.

Prevention Better Than Cure.

In these days, when most medical men are on the still hunt for miraculous cures, specifics in one or other form, it is easy to lose sight of, at least to fail to give sufficient attention to, the matter of the cause or causes of disease and of the means of prevention as well as of the really scientific because so often simple measures calculated so to help nature as to enable her to successfully perform a cure.

We all remember how the profession ransacked the entire earth for some medicament that should "cure" scurvy. No better illustration of what good old Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes declared to be shameful to the profession could be given than the various "treatments" for scurvy till some thoughtful layman discovered the true cause of the disease to be lack of vegetable food. A rational supply of vegetables or fruit and fruit juices and a diminished ration of salt meat sufficed to render all the armies, navies and camp dwellers of the world "immune."—Health Culture.

Siberian Convicts.

Some interesting phases of Siberian life are described in Samuel Turner's book on that country. Of the exiles he writes: "When I told a Siberian friend that I carried a revolver as a protection against wolves I was promptly informed that I had much more reason to fear the human wolves I might encounter, and this, I found, was a general view of the case. About one-third of the criminal exiles escape all control. Armed with a stick, to which is attached a strong piece of cord or catgut, they will approach the unwary traveler from behind, throw the cord round his neck and quietly strangle him by twisting the stick, to rob him at their leisure of whatever he may possess or secure his passport in order to make their escape from the country."

A Siberian Wonder.

The scientists have for years been perplexed over the wonderful frozen well at Yakutsk, Siberia. As long ago as 1828 it was announced that the ground was frozen to an abnormal depth at the place referred to. In the summer of 1829 a Russian merchant set a gang of men to the task of ascertaining the depth of the frozen stratum. They gave up the job after digging some thirty feet in solidly frozen ground. The Russian Academy of Sciences took the matter in hand and between 1838 and 1844 dug to a depth of 382 feet and then abandoned the shaft because the earth was still frozen as hard as a rock. Natural cold could never penetrate to such a depth, and the phenomenon is still unexplained.

The Horse as a Jumper.

A horse can certainly jump higher than a man. There is at least one authentic case of a hunter clearing a seven foot paling, and a century or so ago a Mr. Bingham leaped his horse over the wall of Hyde park, which was six and one-half feet high on the inside and eight feet on the outside. The horse cleared this obstacle twice in rapid succession, and we are quite certain that no man who has ever lived could do it.—London Answers.

Coffee In Guatemala.

The laborers in the coffee plantations in Guatemala get only 3 to 20 cents (gold) a day. The capitalists get as profit 50 to 60 per cent of the market value. During harvesting time the coffee business gives employment to more than one-half of the population. A single coffee tree, under the most favorable conditions, has been known to yield twenty-five pounds of beans.

Work and Talk.

Generally speaking, it is true of women as of men that those who think most say least. Woman's talkativeness is the result of her sedentary occupation. Tailors, shoemakers and weavers—all men who sit close at their work—have, in common with women, not only hypochondriacal fancies, but also a tendency to great talkativeness.—Richter.

The Word Cigar.

The word cigar occurs in a German dictionary for the first time in 1813 and in the Dictionnaire of the French Academie in 1835. Kant used the word "ziggaro" in 1798. In Spain at the present day the word "cigarro" means a cigarette, for which the Spaniards have the word "pitillos." Their name for a cigar is "un puro."

ANIMALS' WANDERINGS.

Country Mouse and Town Mouse Fable Has Foundation In Fact.

The fable of the country mouse and the town mouse has a foundation in fact. Mice occasionally migrate in large numbers when food grows scarce and travel considerable distances to fresh houses. Farmers in a part of Perthshire had a good reason to become aware of this fact when a couple of years ago vast swarms of mice invaded their cornfields at harvest time.

But the mouse only travels when it has to. The rat, on the contrary, seems to take a yearly outing, in very much the same fashion as do human beings. Rats are the most migratory creatures in the world. Troops of rats leave the towns at the end of summer and spend a month or two in the country, apparently in order to enjoy the change of food which the country affords at that time of the year in the way of fresh fruit and grain. Before the cold weather sets in they are all back again in their old quarters.

Reindeer migrate with the same regularity as swallows. They move south when winter sets in, but as soon as ever the snow begins to melt they travel steadily north, sometimes for as much as a thousand miles.

To end a holiday by deliberate suicide is so strange a phenomenon that for a long time naturalists looked upon the stories of the migration of the lemmings as an improbable fiction. Yet the facts are beyond dispute. At irregular intervals these ratlike creatures start out from their homes in the fastnesses of northern Scandinavia in huge droves numbering tens of thousands and travel steadily southward. Death pursues them in a hundred forms. Hawks and other birds of prey hover above them. Thousands are drowned in rivers. Yet the rest struggle on until they reach the sea. They do not stop. They plunge in, swim out and struggle on until at last their strength fails and they drown. Not one ever returns from this journey of death.—London Answers.

Imprisoned In the Wind.

Butterflies may be imprisoned and uninjured in the midst of a whirlwind. Gales in a genuine typhoon are so terrible that the stoutest ships can scarcely hope to weather them, but there is a spot at the very center of the storm where something like a dead calm prevails. From the outer edge of the disturbance, which may be 300 miles across, the wind velocity increases toward the center until within a few miles of that point there comes a sudden lull. There the rain ceases and the sky often clears. In this little calm area, which sailors call "the eye of the storm," a group of butterflies has frequently been imprisoned, and their dainty, delicate forms are as safe in this aerial cage as if hovering in sunny meadows, but as helpless as in a collector's bottle.

TICKLESOME TALES.

One day a football player appeared in the classroom during the football season. The students were deeply shocked, yet they managed to preserve the outward forms of respect. But when, presently, it turned out that the fellow knew his lesson, there was none so poor to do him reverence. "He's gone stale!" was the sneering whisper which ran from lip to lip.

A recent visitor to Beaconsfield churchyard asked a middle-aged native of the village to be directed to the graves of Burke and Waller. That's the shop where Devereaux, the trunk-murder man, used to be an apprentice!"

FALL WHEAT RAISING IN ALBERTA.

The Spring Wheat Areas Are Rapidly Increasing.

It is only a few short years since the impression prevailed that a large portion of the Canadian West was unfitted for agriculture. To such an extent did this impression prevail that districts larger than European principalities were devoted solely to ranching purposes, and flocks and herds roamed the ranges. But the agriculturist was doing some hard thinking, and gradually experiments were made, slowly at first, but surely later on. As a result, to-day in Southern Alberta, which was looked upon as the "arid belt," large quantities of the finest winter wheat in the world are now grown, and so satisfied are the farmers and buyers that the industry has passed the experimental stage, that elevators by the score have been erected in the past two years and others are in course of erection, to satisfy the demands that will be made upon them in the near future.

Manitoba "No. 1 Hard" spring wheat has achieved a world-wide reputation, and there can be no question that ere long "No. 1 Hard" winter wheat from Alberta will attain similar repute. The great market for this production will undoubtedly be the Orient, and, with increased railway facilities and the erection of additional elevators and flouring mills, a largely increased acreage will be broken to winter wheat. The increase of population in Southern Alberta in the past year has been largely due to settlers from the United States, who have brought in capital, and enterprise, and who have been uniformly successful in their undertakings. A few more such years of growth and "Turkey Red" winter wheat will wave from Moose Jaw to the foothills. Information regarding lands in the Fall and Spring Wheat belts may be obtained of any Canadian government agent.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Freight Rates.

St. Paul.—The railroad and warehouse commission presented a maximum merchandise tariff to officials of Minnesota roads and asked them to show cause why it should not be adopted as a basis hereafter.

The proposed tariff is a sweeping reduction. There is no uniform basis now for merchandise rates. They are governed by competitive conditions.

The commission took an average of the present distributing rates on first-class freight, made for given distances by seven roads—the Northern Pacific, Great Northern, Soo, Great Western, Milwaukee, Omaha and Minneapolis & St. Louis. The proposed tariff makes a general reduction from that average of 8.33 cents, or 28 per cent on a fifty-mile haul; 7.66 cents, or 20 per cent, on a hundred-mile haul; 8.08 cents, or 16 2-3 per cent on 150 miles; 3.78 cents or 7 per cent, on 200 miles; 8.13 cents, or 13 per cent, on 250 miles, and 6.98 cents, or 10 per cent on 300 miles.

The railroad officials asked time to consider the tarriff and the hearing was continued till Feb. 1. At that time the railroads will either agree to the rate or present evidence to show why it should not be enforced. The commission has decided that the reduction is reasonable, and it is up to the traffic officials to prove to them that it is not.

Narrow Escape.

Virginia.—In a cave-in of quicksand at the Lincoln mine, which had been timbered up, Pelka Nichni, a miner, was buried twenty feet deep, from 8 o'clock in the evening to 6 in the morning, and then was rescued alive. A large boulder, weighing several tons, together with some of the timbers, fell in such a way that a small cavity was left about the upper part of Nichni's chest and head, the rest of his body being held by the dirt as firmly as by a vise. The rescuing party of ten men worked like Trojans, on fifteen minute shifs, there being room for only two men to work at a time. When Nichni was reached, the candles of the men nearest him were extinguished, the air having become exhausted to such a degree. Nichi is a hospital and will recover.

Deer Eat Hay.

Crookston.—Deer are so numerous in the north country that settlers on the reservation south of Red lake are seriously considering an appeal to the state game warden to protect them from the ravages caused by the animals. Andy Higgins, a homesteader from that vicinity, says that the deer are eating the farmer's hay; that he saw eight together on one day surrunding a hay stack. He believes that Game Warder Fullerton should send a deputy to that section next fall to cut hay for the deer so that they will let the settlers' crop alone. He says the settlers are getting out of patience and are liable to violate the game laws if something is not done.

Accidents.

St. Paul.—A report of the state labor department shows that during the last three months of 1905, 185 accidents were reported by factories in the state. This number was almost exactly evenly divided among the three months. Some accidents were fatal. Of the accidents reported more were finger hurts than any other kind. Railroad shops had the most accidents, and sawmills came next.

As to ages, there were 27 under 20 years of age, 33 from 20 to 25, 31 from 25 to 30, 16 from 30 to 35, 15 from 35 to 40, 19 from 40 to 45, 13 from 45 to 50, 6 from 50 to 55, 5 from 55 to 60, one over 60, and 21 whose ages were not given.

Will Open State Fair.

Hamline.—The keynote for the Minnesota state fair of 1906 was struck by the board of managers when it invited James J. Hill to make the address opening the fair and dedicating the grand new live stock amphitheater.

Mr. Hill accepted and will speak on some subject appropriate to the occasion—which will be, perhaps, the most significant in the history of the development of agriculture in the Northwest.

The opening of the amphitheater will be a great event. It is the largest amphitheater in the country and emphasizes most emphatically the importance of the Minnesota state.

News Notes.

Minneapolis—The German singing societies of the Twin Cities will hold a general rehearsal here Feb. 14.

Red Wing—A business change of considerable importance to Red Wing and a number of cities throughout the Northwest occurred in the transfer of the lumber business of the Charles Betcher Lumber company to other local and outside parties.

Duluth—A strike has been declared by the boiler-makers employed at Duluth and Superior.

Duluth—Gasoline cars, similar to those run on the Union Pacific railroad, will be used on the new system to be built from Biwabik and Hibbing this year.

St. Paul—The grand executive committee of the U. C. T. names a committee to work for better hotel inspection laws.

Minneapolis—Fire broke out in the residence of S. P. Snider, 1226 Mount Curve avenue and did about $2,000 damage to the building.

Duluth—It is reported that the Edward Hines Lumber company during the last week sold 35,000,000 feet of lumber, to be sawn at Ashland and Superior, and a Duluth broker has sold 10,000,000 feet to Saginaw. The prices of lumber range from $2.50 to $3 a thousand higher than a year ago.

DACHSHUND IN A FLAT.

The Serial or Continued Canine Is Apt to Take Up Too Much Room.

Our ever delightful colaborer of the woman's department gently quarrels, in an essay on canine environment, at the incongruity of the dachshund in a flat, though she does not tell us, remarks the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, wherein the incongruity lies. It would seem to the common or garden mind that a dachshund would be better placed in a flat than in a house, for when one has a dog, he likes to have him all on one floor.

A serial or continued dog like the dachshund is apt to extend from the attic to the basement of a house, and you can't tell which end is which without taking a great many steps, all covered with dog. You may go to the basement to feed him, and find that you have come to the wrong end—the feeding part being in the third floor front.

Now, in a flat, where the rooms are all on one floor and in a straight row—they are always either one behind the other or one before the other—you can tell how your dachshund is going to end, from the first chapter, so to speak. Of course, you can't shut any doors, but one never shuts doors in a flat, anyway—it takes up too much room.

And in a flat a dachshund, being unable to turn 'round, is susceptible to some permanency of artistic treatment. His head and shoulders in the parlor may be decorated to suit, and each section of his anatomy made to agree in its general color scheme, with the room it inhabits. And the whole theory of the dachshund is in harmony with flat life. You have to look at him on the installment plan.

WAS WITHIN HIS RIGHTS.

An Argument That Admitted of Some Disputatious Question.

The Naggsbys were entertaining, and to be entertained by the Naggsbys is a liberal education in the art of bickering, and making things generally uncomfortable for everyone present, relates the Bystander.

One of the guests was engaged in the gentle and alluring amusement of criticising an absent friend.

"Well," he said, "he's the meanest, stingiest man I ever knew; in fact, I don't think there's another man in the world who is so mean—"

"Oh, I don't know," interrupted Naggsby; "that's a pretty tall order, you know. I think I know a stingier man. There's my father-in-law, for instance—"

This acted like a red flag on Mrs. Naggsby.

"Look here," she snapped, "you're always backbiting your father-in-law! I simply won't stand it!"

"Oh, pooh, pooh!" rejoined Naggsby. "He's my father-in-law, not yours. Just you wait until I say something about yours before you begin to talk!"

That was at eight o'clock, and at 11:30 they were still at it, and going stronger than ever.

DOCTOR CURED OF ECZEMA.

Maryland Physician Cures Himself—Dr. Fisher Says: "Cuticura Remedies Possess True Merit."

"My face was afflicted with eczema in the year 1897. I used the Cuticura Remedies, and was entirely cured. I am a practicing physician, and very often prescribe Cuticura Resolvent and Cuticura Soap in cases of eczema, and they have cured where other formulas have failed. I am not in the habit of endorsing patent medicines, but when I find remedies possessing true merit, such as the Cuticura Remedies do, I am broad-minded enough to proclaim their virtues to the world. I have been practicing medicine for sixteen years, and must say I find your Remedies A No. 1. You are at liberty to publish this letter. G. M. Fisher, M. D., Big Pool, Md., May 24, 1905."

INDUSTRIAL ITEMS.

The old style sharp-pointed shoe of Spanish origin has nearly disappeared in Mexico, having been replaced by the American lasts.

The cabinet makers of France are artists, but they keep reproducing, year after year, the styles which their forefathers have made for centuries.

The cut of lumber in the Canadian province of Ontario will exceed that of last year by 100,000,000 feet. The cut will total about 450,000,000 feet.

Germany pig iron production in October passed, for the first time, the million-ton mark. The month's output reached 1,006,943 tons, a gain of 16 per cent. over October last year.

This country ranks first in the paper-making industry. Germany is second, and Great Britain comes third. The production in America is two or three times greater than in Great Britain.

The United States consumes all of its annual iron output of 35,000,000 tons. England consumes 6,000 tons more than its 14,000,000 ton output, and Germany 3,000,000 more than its 21,000,000 ton output.

One brick-making company put out 84,260,000 bricks, with an average to the machine of nearly 3,750,000. This is the largest average, and the greatest total of brick ever made in New York state by any brick manufacturing plant.

According to recent statistical statements published in the Bulletin of the Commercial Geographical society of Paris, the world's production of petroleum was divided as follows: United States, 15,000,000 tons; Russia, 10,600,000; Sumatra, Java and Borneo, 1,000,000; Roumania, 496,000; the East Indies, 404,000; all others, 250,000.

BUSINESS PRECEPTS.

Be original—if you are "different" the market for your talent is wider. If you do things the same as everybody else—somebody will cut the price and you will have to work cheap. If you possess individuality you have almost a monopoly and can get your own price.

Are you deaf to the knock of opportunity? Probably so, most of the time; and it is the same with every other man. Men of business are usually "over ears" in the rumble of routine thought, and it is small wonder that opportunity's timid raps are unperceived amid the sense-dulling din of the machinery of habit.

The habit of doing things, of viewing them in a certain way, once firmly fixed becomes a tyrant of the mind. It suppresses effort at reform and denies liberty of action to the faculties. Originality and progress are chained to the dungeon walls of custom. A man in business whose methods are dominated by rigid habit, becomes a mere automaton.

Why does a young firm grow? Because its members have not yet become slaves of time-worn methods. Why does an old house cease to grow? Because, in a measure, its members have their eyes blinded by the veil of custom and their ears have been stopped with the cotton of habit. They neither see nor hear the movement of changing conditions.

FACIAL PARALYSIS

Nervous Distortion of Face Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

What appears to be a slight nervous attack may be the forerunner of a severe disorder. No nervous sufferer should neglect the warning symptoms, but should see that the starved nerves are nourished before the injury to the delicate organism has gone to an extent that renders a cure a difficult matter. The nerves receive their nourishment through the blood, the same as every other part of the body, and the best nerve tonic and food is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The experience of Mr. Harry Bemis, of Truthville, Washington county, N. Y., substantiates this.

"I had been feeling badly for a long time," said Mr. Bemis, "and in the early part of September, 1902, I was compelled to quit work on account of my ill health. My trouble was at first extreme nervousness, then my sight became affected and I consulted an oculist who said I was suffering from paralysis. He treated me for some time, but I got no benefit. I tried another doctor and again failed to obtain any relief. My nervousness increased. Slight noises would almost make me wild. My mouth was drawn so I could scarcely eat and one eye was affected so I could hardly see. I had very little use of my limbs, in fact I was almost a complete wreck.

"I am all right now and am at work. That is because I followed my wife's advice and took Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She had used the same remedy herself with the most gratifying results and she persuaded me to try them when it appeared that the doctors were unable to help me. They acted very surely in my case; my face came back into shape and in time I was entirely well."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists or by mail by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y. A booklet on Nervous Disorders sent free on request.

CHINESE BOYCOT AMERICA

DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION AT CHILI DISCHARGED.

Commissioner of Customs at Canton is Ousted Because He is an American.

Pekin, Feb. 5.—Yuan Shi Kai, viceroy of Chili province, has discharged Prof. C. D. Tenney, the foreign director of education, who organized the new school system in this province. Strong opposition has arisen lately to foreign school managements and particularly to Dr. Tenney, because he is an American. Yuan Shi Kai told Dr. Tenney that numerous enemies of the viceroy had forced the discharge.

The boycott against American goods is being revived. When it began the American minister and the American consuls urged the Chinese to wait until congress had time to act on their demands. The failure of congress to do so has aroused resentment.

Strong pressure has been brought to bear upon the government to remove E. B. Drew, the commissioner of customs at Canton, because he is an American. He is considered one of the ablest men in the establishment of Sir Robert Hart, director general of maritime customs.

Prof. Tenny was an appointee of Yuan Shi Kai and started the construction of the college at Paotingfu, the seat of the vicory.

In July, 1900, at the time of the Boxer uprising, Dr. Tenney was president of the University of Tien-tsin. He became angry over the nightly entertainments given by the high officers of the allied troops and at the delay of the forces to march from Tien-tsin to Pekin, offering to guide the army thither.

Hongkong, Feb. 5.—Foreigners at Canton are in a state of great apprehension owing to the insufficiency of police protection. After the looting Saturday of the residence of the Rev. Andrew Beattie, an American Presbyterian missionary at Fati, by an armed band of Chinese, the guard boat was requested to send assistance but the the commander replied that he was not empowered to comply with the request.

BRINGS BIG CAPTURE.

North Dakota Detective Gets Eleven Prisoners Besides Large Quantity of Goods.

Minot, N. D., Feb. 5.—John F. Skinner, a State Enforcement league detective has arrived here with eleven prisoners, twenty-nine cases of beer, a pillowcase full of poker chips and a $400 roulette wheel as the result of a rade made on gamblers, "piggers" and other disorderly characters at Portal.

Portal, which is near the Canadian border, has been a hard proposition for the enforcement league. The men wanted had a habit of skipping across the border just about the time a raid was to be pulled off. When an attempt was made several months ago to arrest some of the ringleaders, Deputy Sheriff Wallace George was attacked and almost killed.

It is said that the prisoners captured will plead guilty when arranigued in in court.

Turns State's Evidence.

Helena, Mont., Feb. 5.—One of the most sensasonal horse stealing cases tried in Montana in years is on in Bozeman, where Roland Sloan and Ross Maxwell are accused of wholesale theft of horses, changing their brands and reselling them. The case took on a sensational turn when Maxwell turned state's evidence and deliberately related to the jury his story to the effect that he and Sloan, aided by A. W. Allen, a ranchman, acting as go-between, robbed ranchers right and left of horses and cleverly altered the brands. It appears that the alleged thieves, like those in the adage, fell out, and arrests followed. All of the accused live near Bozeman.

Prairie Fire.

Cheyenne, Wyo, Feb 5.—Driven by a high wind, a prairie fire swept over twenty-five miles range east of here, destroying great quantities of hay and otherwise devastating the area over which it passed.

Pine Bluff, a small town, was threatened for a time, but is no longer in danger. Word comes from Salema, a Swedish settlement that all buildings there were destroyed.

Killed by Ore.

Chisholm, Minn., Feb. 5.—Andrew Kirkanan, a Finnish laborer at the Meyers mine, was killed by a run of loose ore. He was employed underground, and the ore, not more than a bushel of loose stuff, came away from the face of the stope and struck him directly on the head.

Hotel Burns.

Frazee, Minn., Feb 5.—Fire destroyed the Briggs hotel and saloon. The loss is $3,000, partly covered by insurance. Some excitement was caused by a series of explosions of liquor in the saloon.

WASHINGTON LETTER

MR. CRANE THE UNSUSPECTED JOKESMITH OF THE SENATE.

A CONSERVATIVE MEMBER

A New Manner of Dealing with One Class of Offenders—Wisconsin Man Finished Musician—Congressman Longworth a Singer.

WASHINGTON. — If one were looking for the jokesmith of the senate, he would hardly pick out the solemn-looking W. Murray Crane, of Massachusetts. That quiet, serious, businesslike gentleman gives no outward evidence of being a humorist, but all the same he is a most inveterate practical joker. For some time past he has been "stringing" a young member of the senate whose political ambitions are only bounded by the presidency of the United States. He has told this senator that the success of a young man lies in making plans for the future and sticking to them. "Now, you have a brilliant political future," said Mr. Crane, the other day, "and you ought to make a definite plan. You ought to be president some day, but I would advise you to fix on 1920 as the year to seek the nomination."

Then the senator advised the applicant to see another man in the senate and to get the latter's inuence. "Your success depends upon keeping quiet," said Mr. Crane, "so you want to see this other man by himself and talk to him confidentially." Then Mr. Crane went to the other man and told him that Senator So-and-So wanted to talk with him on a certain subject. "He will bore you to death," said Mr. Crane, "so do not allow him to see you alone."

Since that time the senator with presidential aspirations has been pursuing the other senator who may do him some good, and the latter has been avoiding him as much as possible. When he sees the ambitious one coming towards him, he always manages to get alongside another senator, so that the conversation cannot be private or confidential. The antics of these two senators has afforded Mr. Crane and a few of his friends who are in the secret intense enjoyment. Mr. Crane is liable to carry this joke along for months.

Senator Allison's Caution.

SENATOR ALLISON, of Iowa, the father of the senate and the most respected man in that body, has for many years had the reputation of being the most cautious and conservative man in his public utterances in the senate. On most subjects it is difficult to get the venerable senator to make an absolute, unqualified declaration. His caution has become a joke which he appreciates as much as anyone else. Just before the holiday recess the senator was twitted with his reputation for safeguarding a statement of fact. In urging action on a measure he declared "the Christmas holidays are coming."

Senator Spooner, who was sitting at Mr. Allison's elbow, remarked sotto voce: "That is a very positive statement for you to make." The rosy-cheeked old senator from Iowa gasped, smiled, stammered a little and pulled himself together and resumed:

"Well, ah, that is—we may assume that the holidays are about to come. We have not received the usual holiday resolution for adjournment yet, but I think I may safely assume that the Christmas holidays are approaching." The clever way in which Mr. Allison saved his reputation for conservatism created a roar of laughter in the senate.

The "Panhandlers."

THIS is a bad year for "panhandlers" at the capitol. There have been fewer arrests by the capitol police of men who engage in shady transactions and attempt to bunco congressmen out of small sums of money than there have been for many years. Capt. Megrew, chief of the capitol police, gave his detectives and police explicit instructions to look out for this class of frauds. Heretofore when one of the fraternity was discovered plying his trade, he was simply ejected from the building and warned not to return. Last session and at the beginning of this congress the police adopted a new policy and sent the offenders to the police court.

"There are no more warnings given," said Capt. Megrew. "We have found they are not as effective as a term in the chain gang and 60 days of labor with pick and shovel. Word has been passed around among the grafting fraternity of our intention in this matter, and that is why we have not had a single complaint or arrest since the holidays."

It is easily recalled that a few years ago the capitol building and grounds were infested with every type of the beggar fraternity from the "give me a penny" small fry to the hardened grafter who would request the loan of a "ten spot; just to tide me over, you know, until I get a remittance from home."

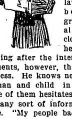
Musical Congressmen.

THERE would be no trouble in organizing a first-class male chorus for concert work or a light opera among the members of the house and senate. There are quite a number of well known congressmen who possess voices and musical knowledge away above the average. During former Speaker Henderson's administration it was the customary thing after the adjournment of a session or of a congress for the members to linger in the hall while the songsters of their number rendered popular airs and patriotic hymns. Henderson himself was quite a leader in these demonstrations, and since he went out of office the practice has fallen into innocuous desuetude.

The three "Jims" in the house—Jim Watson, Jim Tawney and Jim Sherman—are noted for their melodious voices. Sherman is a fairly good tenor; Tawney is a light barytone and Watson a deep barytone. Then there is Charlie Landis, who sings a first tenor, and Col. Morrell, of Philadelphia, who has a very pleasing voice, besides a dozen others who can do good chorus work. "Hal" Cooper, of Wisconsin, is the most finished musician in the house. His favorite instrument is the piano, and it is a treat to hear him perform on a first-class instrument, improvising music of his own.

Representative Longworth, of Ohio, now famous as the fiance of Miss Alice Roosevelt, is also a singer and plays well on the piano. He prefers comic and character songs and can entertain a whole company by rendering dialect and vaudeville airs to his own accompaniment upon the piano.

Knute Nelson of Minnesota.



ONE of the busiest and most painstaking members of the senate is Knute Nelson, of Minnesota. He calls himself a farmer, but there are few lawyers in that body who give great constitutional questions any closer study than he does. It is in looking after the interests of his constituents, however, that he is most tireless. He knows nearly every man, woman and child in Minnesota, and none of them hesitates to write to him for any sort of information or assistance. "My people back home are as well informed and up-to-date as people anywhere," said the senator the other day, "but some of them now and then give me a bad jolt." The senator then showed a colleague a letter which he had just received from a Norwegian at "Sleepy Eye." The letter read:

"When you go to the capitol the next time please go in the pension office and get my pension increase pushed through, and then see if the fish commission will give us some trout seed up here. Some time see the postmaster general and have Nils Swenson made postmaster at Koday, and if you see him tell Secretary Wilson we all up here want plenty new cabbage next spring. Same time go in attorney general's office and poke up Moody to get Halvor Halvors out of jail for selling whisky to Indians. That's all now. Thanking you for past favors, yours, etc."

"That letter," said Mr. Nelson, "is a sample of many I have received in my service in congress. Lots of folks think the whole government is under one roof and that I have only to go from one room to another to attend to their business and do their errands."

At the same time there are not many of these "errands" that the senator neglects to attend to. His great strength with the people of his state is in paying attention to all sorts of requests, and scattered throughout Minnesota there are probably more autograph letters of Senator Nelson treasured up as souvenirs in the humble homes than of any other public man. He personally replies to every communication.

NOT FOR JACOBSON.

The St.Hilaire Spectator and Thief River Falls News had the following "tilt" last week.

CONTRIBUTED.

Ives[of the St. Hilare Spectator] is not for Jacobson for governor because he knows there would be no boodle in it for him to support a man like Jacobson. Who is he for? Ask Markus Johnson He is the man that usaly has the price to bring Harry in line.—News.

We find the foregoing from the Thief River Falls News. It would not be hard for anyone to guess who the author is. Fortuinatly small comunities like this contain but few cowardly sneaks who would write anything of this kind without signing his name. It says we are not for Jacobson for governor. Corect we are not, and for the following reasons:

In the first place we do not think Jacobson is the man who can unite the warring elements of the republican party.

Second We do not think he has the ability to successfuly take the stump against Governor Johnson

Third: His drainage records show that he is not in sympathy with the movement to improve the northern part of the state.

Fourth His present supporters are the men who bolted Dunn and supported Johnson and the opinion is growing that they have picked out Jacobson as a man who could be easily beaten —Spectator

The farmers of this locality are beginning to take an active interest in the building of creamery's, as they have just began to awake to the fact, that they must have an income and there is no shurer way to get it than from the cow.

Your children may blame you for voting a debt for them to pay but they will blame you more if you don't try to provide them with the means to get an education in their youth.

Nilsson and Patti.

When Christine Nilsson, the great singer, was asked her opinion of various singers, she gave it very candidly of every one, including herself and Mme. Albani, but she never once alluded to Mme. Patti.

"You have not mentioned Mme. Patti," remarked the pertinacious interviewer.

"No," said Mme. Nilsson, "I have not. You are asking about singers. I do not regard Patti as a singer. I place her among the angels. A Patti only comes to a planet once during that planet's existence." Such an absence of stage jealousy has probably never been equaled.

Date Mark a Bagdad Malady.

Bagdad date mark is the name given to a mysterious disease that attacks nearly every one who stays in Bagdad for any length of time and is found also at Aleppo and other places in Turkish Asia. It is a sore that comes only once, but lasts a year, leaving a scar the shape of a date. Nearly all the natives are marked with it. No remedy has been found for it, but hyposulphite of soda seems to have some effect on the mark.

The Beauty of the Lilies.

"Er—Miss Hardy—Grace—do you not think that these valley lilies are very beautiful?"

"Not so beautiful as orange blossoms, Mr. Jones."

And, thus assisted and encouraged, he presently drifted out upon the wide, wide sea of wedded bliss.

A Desperate Case.

Walk O. Nights—Doctor, what is a simple remedy for sleeplessness? Doctor—Let the person count till he falls asleep. Walk O. Nights—He can't count. It's the baby.

The honor we receive of those who fear and stand in awe of us is no true honor.—Montaigne.

A FROLIC IN MEXICO

BREAKING THE PINATA DURING THE CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL.

This Mirth Provoking Pastime Is the Great Social and Fun Making Feature of the Season—Dressing and Filling the Olla.

Christmas in Mexico is not the typical Christmas of cold and snow and ice, but one of bright, warm sunshine, cloudless blue skies, flowers in profusion, trees in full foliage and a life of out of doors.

At least a week before Christmas in the principal streets of Mexico arches are erected from sidewalk to sidewalk festooned with wreaths of flowers and bunting in the national colors—red white and green. Under the arches booths are erected, and every toy manufactured in Mexico is on sale.

In every Mexican house great preparations are made for what is called the "pinata." Every child begs and scrapes and saves the centavos for weeks and months ahead. All kinds of articles are made especially for this ceremony, and every family vies with its friends and neighbors to have its pinata more beautiful and fanciful than any one else's.

The pinata is really an earthenware utensil which is in general use for cooking. It is called in common parlance an olla and is of brown pottery something like the old fashioned earthenware crocks used in the north before enamel ware became the fad.

The pinatas are large or small, as the purse of the purchaser permits. They are round, pot bellied and very large at the top. They are sold from door to door on the streets and in the markets. They cost only 10, 15 or 20 centavos, but the olla is the least expensive part of the game.

The body of the olla for a woman is covered with tissue paper; then a crinkled paper dress is fashioned; then a bodice is built up draped to represent a loose white waist, and above this is placed a false face. The hair is made with black paper, braided into one long plait at the back, as the women wear their hair in Mexico. Sometimes a white tehuana [illegible] dress is made of the lace paper [illegible] bakers and confectioners.

A flower [illegible] is decorated with large paper [illegible] in every color of the rainbow [illegible] white and green ribbons, form[illegible] streamers, and silver and gold [illegible] glass balls and colored lights all help to make the flower pinata very beautiful. The possibilities for dressing these pinatas are endless. In a large family the mother and daughters have their own pinatas, and great secrecy is maintained in the decoration of the olla. It is the aim of each to devise as original a dressing for the pinata as possible, and it can be made a very extravagant ornament. In the families of wealthy Mexicans the luxury of the pinata often mounts into thousands.

After the olla is decorated to the taste it is filled. The filling consists of peanuts, hazel nuts, hard candies, like marbles, and all kinds of Mexican dulces. These dulces are candied fruits, nut paste, etc.

Christmas night the pinatas are carried in great state into the sala and suspended from the ceiling one at a time. All the relatives of the family are present, and as cousins of the fifth and sixth degree are recognized and children are very numerous there is generally a large gathering. They all sit very demurely on chairs ranged in a row around the walls of the room.

One person is constituted master of ceremonies, the eldest son or daughter of the house. He or she stands in the middle of the room. Near by is a jar or umbrella stand filled with apisaco canes or sticks. When everything is ready a child or grown person is selected and called by name. She comes forward and is blindfolded.

Then the fun begins. The person blindfolded is turned round and round until she loses all knowledge of where the pinata hangs. A cane is put in her hands, and she is told to hit the pinata and try to break it. She is given three chances. If she fails to hit it she sits down amid laughter and ridicule. If she hits it without breaking it she is entitled to a small prize.

And so it goes on, one after another being called up, blindfolded and given a cane and three chances to break the pinata. Finally one more fortunate than the rest succeeds in giving a hard enough blow, and, crash, the pinata falls to the grounds in hundreds of bits, and its contents are scattered far and wide.

A wild scramble ensues. Everybody rushes forward to gather as much of the spilled contents as possible.

The fortunate breaker of the pinata gets a handsome prize and is awarded the seat of honor. He or she sits down and is debarred from another trial at breaking another pinata. As soon as the confusion dies down and order is somewhat restored another olla is hung up and the same routine gone through. So the fun continues until the last pinata is broken, and then the prizes are awarded.

The pinata party is the great social and fun making feature of the Christmas season. After the pinatas have been broken and a supper has been served there follows dancing, or a traveling company of Indians from the mountains is brought in to sing and dance in native costume.

These traveling Indians are somewhat like the singing bands which go around at Christmas time from house to house in England, Germany, France and Italy. They have been known and popular in Mexico from time immemorial. The are much in demand during the Christmas holiday season.—Kansas City Star.

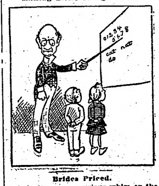
Making Little Things Count.



Brides Priced.

To us it seems a curious whim on the part of our ancestors of the eighteenth century that in their marriage announcements they should so often choose and with such seeming complacency to enlighten the world with regard to the amount of fortune received with the brides. Here are two cases in point: "Mr. James Coutts of Jeffry's Sq., merchant, to Miss Peagrum of Knightsbridge, £30,000." "W. Smith, gentleman, of the 2d Troop of Horse Guards, to Mrs. Ann Gardiner, a maiden lady, aged, 'tis said, near 70, with a fortune of £20,000."—Chambers' Journal.

Plant a Tree.

When eating a good pear or apple save the seeds and plant them either in a flower pot, where they will germinate before long, or else directly in the garden, when they will come up next spring. To prevent their loss the place must be covered as a mark. It takes a number of years before they bear fruit, but to see the progress of growth from year to year is always interesting. People often think it is not worth while for them to plant trees. They will not live to have fruit of them and so neglect it entirely. But some one will enjoy the harvest. It is just the individual egotism which causes so much unhappiness and affects all classes of society in many ways.—Hartford Times.

Great Heads and Little Wit.

Great men are usually said to have great memories, but it does not follow that all who have great memories are great men. I remember an idiot in Ohio who was a great curiosity many years ago. He knew the whole Bible by heart from beginning to end, and if any verse was read or repeated to him he could tell exactly in what book and chapter it was to be found and its verse number in the chapter. He was considered a great marvel in this particular, but in every other he was a mental imbecile and could not be trusted even to feed himself.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Mr and Mrs. Dan Sullivan visited friends and relatives at St. Hilaire on Friday last, returning this week Tuesday.

P. Sullivan, A Eave and ye editor attended the creamery meetting at Rhoda on last saturday afternoon.

Ye Editor has been on the sick list the past week with a severe cold, which accounts for the shortness of our editorial colum this week.

The Merchants State Bank, of Red Lake Falls, will furnish the money at 6 per cent interest on District bonds, running ten or fifteen years to build your school house.

Thomas Sullivan returned to his home here Tuesday after a few weeks spent looking after his business interests at Crystal N. D. He says snow is more plentiful out there than it is here.

James Kelly, A. W. Shuston and Thomas Jacobson drove down to Thief River Falls Sunday, where Mr Kelly made final proof on his homestead before U.S. Commissioner Browning, on Monday.

Stephen Singer of Gully came up yesterday and will again take hold of the SUNBEAM with us. Mr. Singer will look after the office part here, and leave us more at liberty to attend to the legal part, and our "trio" friends.

There was a meeting at Rady on Tuesday afternoon for the taking of some action to build a bridge across the Clearwater, at A. Rollinsons place. We did not learn the particulars of what was done at the meeting but it is certainly a move in the right direction.

Although there was one of the worst blizzards of the season on last Saturday evening, there was a fair sized crowed at the masquerade ball at Rhoda, and while the wind howled the dancers kept themselves warm by on with the dance until daylight.

J. E Buskirk and A. Alrick drove up from Plummer to attend the farmers creamery meeting at Rhoda, on last Saturday afternoon. They are both business men of that place who take an active interest in the wellfare and the upbuilding of the farming country tributary to them.

Cards are out annoucing the marriage of Mr. Charley Berg to Miss Annie Swansen at Gully, tomorrow afternoon at the Woodmen's Hall A grand reception and ball will be given in the evening. The bride and groom are well and favorably known in Polk and Clearwater counties and the SUNBEAM joins in with their many friends and wishes them a long and a happy matrimonal life.

Mr. Ed Rustad, one the most prominent young prosperious farmer's of Rhoda' who has been enjoying the bachelor's life on his claim for the past two years, left for a brief visit with friends and relitives in Lessor Twp and while there he took advantage of "the day of rest" and secured a mate from the prairies of that section. The SUNBEAM wishes them much happiness, and extends convolences to the young ladies of that vicinity whom we know are thinking of "what might have been."

DEER PARK.

The real winter weather is with us at last. Thus far the winter has been a very pleasant one, and we are now well along, and dont look for many more days of the real thing, but we do look for an early spring.

Rev. Mostue, came up from Winsor, last Saturday, for to hold services in different places here on Sunday.

Stephen Singer, returned from a trip up to the Agency, last Thursday.

M. E. Hyland, transacted business at Gully, last week.

Mrs. Gunda Torgerson, of Grit, is at present calling on friends and relatives here.

Miss Ellen Swenson, one the young Garnes ladies is visiting with relatives here at present.

Dont forget to tell all about the success we had at the creamery meeting that was held at Rhoda, last Saturday. Co-Operation, means "business."

A ball will roll of itself, although it is perfectly round, if you want to see it roll, give it a push. Just so with our creamery; if you want to see it come and expect to get any benefit out of it, why push it along with a share or two.

Joe Duchamp, of Germantown, one of the foremost pioneers of the northwest, was among those that took in the Creamery meeting that was held at Rhoda, last Saturday. It was through Mr. Duchamp's able aid and assistance that we made the headway we did at the meeting. Joe, is a very able and convincing talker, and a man of wide experience, and knows what he talks about, from start to finish, he has at heart what is and goes towards the interest of his community and his country at large, and his services and advice in this respect, is as free as the flowing waters. Joe, is a typical farmer and he is a man that makes it a success, from the word "go" and here is what he says:

The grain raising proposition is getting to be a thing of the past, like all other good things of by gone times, it has seen its best days. If you are going to be a farmer, and make it a success, why turn to the cow for the almighty dollar. He says and advocates that good creameries is the only relief for a farmer now days, without them the farm is a failure, nine times out ten.

The Creamery meeting that was held at Rhoda, last Saturday, on the 3rd., was well attended considering the stormy day. After the discussions and suggestions were heard, motion was made to form an organization to be known as the Rhoda Creamery Association, which all present seemed to favor, and about twelve hundred dollars in shares were disposed of, and an Executive Committee, was appointed which consisted of Mr. George Singer, W. A. Swanson, Tarje Lofthus, A. Rolandson and A. Eve, the duty of these shall be to solicit more shares at once, so that the matter can be pushed right ahead, another meeting be called to elect officers to plan and proceed with the final arrangements of the organization. This meeting will be called in the near future, so that there will be no delays in getting things in shape in a very short time, without doubt, if nothing unusal shows up in the way, why the plant will be in full running order by the 1st. day of June. We highly approve of this very important step taken in this direction at this time, which means another score to the front, not only that, it is a matter of dollars and cents to its promoters and to the community at large, it means an increased value in land and also in other property. A good up to date Creamery is about as good as railroad to a frontier country, it brings good roads with it. So push it along.

Lobster Mortality High.

A lobster lays thousands of eggs, most of which hatch, but few ever live to grow up. This is not the fault of the mother, for she carries them about with her for nearly a year and with admirable instinct guards them as she does her own life. When the young are set free her duty is done, for they must then shift for themselves. Though hardly larger than mosquitoes, being about one-third of an inch long, the little ones leave their parents on the bottom and swim toward the light—to the surface, where from one to two months, if fortune favors them, they lead a free, roving life. The open sea is a poor nursery for such weaklings, which become the sport of every storm and the prey of numberless hungry mouths. Out of a brood of 10,000 it would be a rare chance for more than one or two lobsters to reach maturity or finally to end their career in the kitchen of the chafing dish.—St. Nicholas.

Diet and Digestion.

Abstemiousness in diet is very conducive to a good digestion. It is preferable to be a little underfed than at all overfed. Hence we come to one of the first causes of indigestion in the adult, too large a quantity of food. After an ordinary meal the food should all have left the stomach by the end of six or seven hours. If owing to an excessive quantity the stomach cannot deal with the amount some food remains in the stomach and ferments. This creates discomfort, pain, wind, nausea and perhaps vomiting, by means of which the abused stomach gets rid of its burden. If the sufferer is not thus fortunately sick the best thing he can do is to drink a large tumbler of lukewarm water, which will probably induce vomiting and so wash out the stomach. Half a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda added to the fluid will cause still more relief. During the next twenty-four hours the lightest diet, such as a little tea and dried toast, some boiled rice, a little arrowroot or corn flour, should be taken.

Chotohazree at the Gymkhana.

In "Modern India" the author, William Eleroy Curtis, records his meeting with the word gymkhana and "ventures to say that nobody who has not been in India can guess what that means."

"And if you want another conundrum, what is a chotohazree? It is customary for smart people to have their chotohazree at the gymkhana, and I think you would be pleased to join them after taking the beautiful drive which leads to the place. Nobody knows where the word was derived from, but it is used to describe a country club—a bungalow hidden under a beautiful grove on the brow of a cliff that overhangs the bay—with all of the appurtenances, golf links, cricket grounds, racket courts and indoor gymnasium, and everybody stops there on an afternoon drive to have chotohazree, which is the local term for afternoon tea and for early morning coffee.

Winding Your Watch.

The old superstitious belief that you will change your luck if you stop winding your watch at night and wind it in the morning may have some slight basis in fact, according to a jeweler, who says that the morning is the proper time to do the winding. This is not only because the hour of rising is for the average man much more regular than that for retiring, but even the soberest and most orderly of men are apt to relax and prone to carelessness at bedtime, when more or less worn by the wear and tear of the day. In this condition the winding is apt to be done in a jerky, irregular sort of way or too far or not far enough. "Nine people out of ten wind their watches on going to bed," said the jeweler, "but if they would do it when they get up, at some regular point in the process of making their toilet, they would do it much better."—Philadelphia Record.

Curious Almshouse.

The most curious almshouse in England is St. Mary's hospital at Chichester. There eight old ladies live actually in the church, which is a fine old building dating from 1680. It was originally a monastery, but when Queen Elizabeth came to visit there she turned it into an almshouse to endure as long as almshouses exist. The old ladies have two neat little rooms each down the sides of the main church, with windows looking out on the garden. They have each a coal supply, a kitchen range, water and gas. At one end of the church is the chapel, where daily services are held. The choir stalls are beautifully carved old oak, the original seats that the monks used. The church stands in a quiet little square.

Too Serious.

While a great many persons probably take themselves too seriously, entertaining an altogether exaggerated opinion of their ability and worth, not many nowadays go to the extreme length of the German whom the English poet Coleridge met at Frankfort. He always took off his hat when he ventured to speak of himself. Were this practice to become general what a number of people would be permanently bareheaded!

Boarding a Hansom.

Have you ever noticed the right way to get into a hansom when two people are riding? Few persons know what to do. In nine cases out of ten the one who enters first seats himself on the off side. But this is wrong. If, on getting in first, you take the near seat, your companion can then enter in ease and comfort, which otherwise he could not.

To Waterproof Canvas.

Scientific American gives this recipe for waterproofing for canvas: Soft soap dissolved in hot water and a solution of iron sulphate added. The sulphuric acid combines with the potash of the soap and the iron oxide is precipitated with the fatty acid as insoluble iron soap. This is washed and dried and mixed with linseed oil.

Masculine.

Mrs. Hix—Mrs. June strikes me as being entirely too masculine for a woman. Mrs. Dix—Yes, indeed. Why, every time she has an ache or a pain she makes as much fuss about it as a man would.

Discretion.

First Lawyer—It seems to me you let that last witness down pretty easily in your cross examination. Second Lawyer—I had to. He is my tailor, and I owe him a big bill.

When a man says, "Of course it's no business of mine," it is a sure sign that he is going to do the best he can to make it his business.

CAUGHT BY THE GRIP—RELEASED BY PE-RU-NA.

Pneumonia Followed La Grippe—Pe-ru-na the Remedy That Brought Relief.

Mr. T. Barnecott, West Aylmer, Ontario, Can., writes:

"Last winter I was ill with pneumonia after having la grippe. I took Peruna for two months, when I became quite well, and I can say that any one can be cured by it in a reasonable time and at little expense."

Systemic Catarrh, the Result of La Grippe. Pe-ru-na Receives Credit for Present Good Health.

Mrs. Jennie W. Gilmore, Box 44, White Oak, Ind. Ter., writes:

"Six years ago I had la grippe, which was followed by systemic catarrh. The only thing I used was Peruna and Manalin, and I have been in better health the last three years than for years before. I give Peruna all the credit for my good health."

Pe-ru-na—A Tonic After La Grippe.

Mrs. Chas. E. Wells, Sr., Delaware, Ohio, writes: "After a severe attack of la grippe, I took Peruna and found it a very good tonic."

"Most Effective Medicine Ever Tried for La Grippe."

Robt. L. Madison, A. M., Principal of Cullowhee High School, Painter, N. C., is chairman of the Jackson County Board of Education. Mr. Madison says: "I am hardly ever without Peruna in my home. It is the most effective medicine that I have ever tried for la grippe."

Mrs. Jane Gift, Athens, O., writes: "I had la grippe very bad. My husband bought Peruna for me. In a very short time I saw improvement and was soon able to do my work."

Suffered Twelve Years From After-Effects of La Grippe.

Mr. Victor Patneaude, 328 Madison St., Topeka, Kas., member of Knights and Ladies of Security, writes:

"Twelve years ago I had a severe attack of la grippe and I never really recovered my health and strength—but grew weaker every year until I was unable to work.

"Two years ago I began using Peruna and it built up my strength so that in a couple of months I was able to go to work again.

"This winter I had another attack of la grippe, but Peruna soon drove it out of my system.

"My wife and I consider Peruna a household remedy."

BOTANICAL BITS.

Plants are said to grow faster between the hours of four and six a. m. than at any other time.

Coltsfoot leaves, well dried, were smoked in England prior to the introduction of tobacco.

The passion-flower, which grows in the South American forests, fades almost as soon as it is picked.

Sea weeds do not obtain nourishment from the soil at the bottom of the sea, but from the matter contained in sea water.

WESTERN CANADA'S MARVELOUS RETURNS.

The increase in the crop returns of the Canadian West, in the past seven years, has approached the marvelous, and there is no reason to believe that a corresponding increase will not result for many years to come. The increase has been particularly noticeable in what was formerly known as the Northwest Territories, but which, on September 1, 1905, became the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. From the official returns we find the following results in the acreage sown to wheat, oats and barley in the years mentioned, and a more favorable showing cannot be pointed to in any other country during a like period.

	Wheat.	Oats.	Barley.
1898......	307,580	105,077	17,092
1899......	363,523	134,938	14,276
1900......	412,864	175,439	17,044
1901......	504,697	229,439	24,702
1902......	625,758	310,367	36,445
1903......	837,234	440,662	68,974
1904......	965,549	523,634	98,154

The yield has been uniformly good every year except 1900, when there appears to have been a slump all along the line. This, however, was more than compensated for in the following year, when the bumper crop in wheat, oats and barley put the returns of all previous years completely in the shade and gave an impetus to settlement in the west which has prevailed to the present, as the following table by bushels will show:

	Wheat.	Oats.	Barley.
1899....	6,915,623	4,686,036	337,521
1900....	4,028,294	4,226,152	353,216
1901....	12,808,447	11,113,066	795 100
1902....	13,956,850	10,661,295	970,417

It will be seen that the number of acres sown to wheat, oats and barley in 1898 was 429,749, and that this had increased in 1904 to 1,587,337. The total crop in the cereals mentioned was 9,033,297 bushels in 1898, and in 1904 it had grown to the magnificent total of 35,413,522. In the year just closed the "forward movement" in the agriculture of the west has been the wonder and envy of the world. New sections of the country have been placed under tribute to the plow and harrow, and the grain area has been largely increased. This is particularly the case where it has been demonstrated that "Alberta Red" winter wheat may be successfully grown, and along the lines of the new railways towards the center of the counutry, where mixed farming prevails.

The future of the Canadian West is assured, and for years to come it is bound to be the land of promise to the agriculturist of every nation and of every clime, and the land of opportunity to every settler within its bounds.

Fullest information can be secured from any Canadian Government Agent.

WINTER WEAKNESS

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills the Tonic That Most People Need for Blood and Nerves.

In winter the air of the close rooms in which we spend so much of the time does not furnish enough oxygen to the lungs to burn out the foul matter in the blood. In the cold season we do not exercise as much and the skin and kidneys do not throw off the waste matter as freely as usual. The system becomes overloaded with poisonous matter, and too feeble to throw it off. Relief can be had only through the use of a remedy that will promptly and thoroughly purify and strengthen the blood, and the one best adapted for this purpose is the great blood tonic known as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"They acted like magic in my case," said Mrs. Clara L. Wilde, of No. 377 Farnsworth avenue, Detroit, Mich. "I was weak and thin and could not sleep. My stomach and nerves were out of order. I can't describe how miserable I really was. I dragged through six months of feebleness, growing weaker all the time until I finally hadn't strength enough to leave my bed.

"Then a glad day came, the day when I began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They made me feel strong right away. My appetite came back, I took on flesh and the color returned to my cheeks. People wondered that these pills did for me what the doctors couldn't do. I took only six boxes and then I was perfectly well. If I had not found this wonderful remedy I surely think that I must have wasted to death. Believing firmly that these pills saved my life by the strength which they gave me at a critical moment, I unhesitatingly recommend them to others."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain no stimulant but give strength that lasts. They may be obtained at any drug store.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Peat.

St. Peter.—Nicollet county's peat deposits, regarded as the richest in Minnesota, are to be exploited by the United States Peat Fuel company, with headquarters in Chicago. Officers of the Northwestern Peat Fuel company, which is soon to begin developing the beds near Norwood, are also interested in the venture, and the promoters purpose expending $50,000 in purchasing lands and erecting a factory near Oshawa, a small station on North-Western road, seven miles west of St. Peter. Peat is found in various parts Nicollet county, but the most extensive deposits are in the vicinity of Timber, Oak Leaf, Goose and Middle lakes, all of which are within easy reach of Oshawa. Many of the bogs cover large areas and the peat in them varies from seven to twelve feet in depth. Analysis has shown that the deposits are of fine quality and experts claim that the supply is practically inexhaustible.

Mad Dogs.

Detroit.—As a result of an epidemic of rabies among dogs, the mayor issued instructions that all canines found unmuzzled and running at large should be killed. Up to date forty-four dogs have been shot by the city marshal. On Jan. 9 Axel Ambers, a farmer living near Cormorant drove to town and one of his horses was bitten by a dog. The dog was afterward killed. It is reported that the horse developed symptoms of of hydrophobia and was subsequently killed. Some owners of valuable dogs have strenuously objected to the action of the authorities in killing unmuzzled dogs, and the claim was made that there was no legal authority to kill licensed animals. This question was referred to the state live stock and sanitary board, which, through S. H. Ward, has replied that the authority of the local board is ample.

Saloonkeepers' Fault.

Winona.—The criminal calender for the January term of the district court for this county has been completed, and there was only one acquittal of the ten prisoners arraigned. Victor Malawicki entered a plea of guilty to assault in the second degree, for stabbing F. Geisel, and he was sentenced to an indeterminate sentence in the reformatory at St. Cloud. Judge Snow in sentencing Malawicki, who said that he was drunk at the time of the stabbing, stated in effect that the real offenders were the saloonkeepers who sold the liquor, and that if something is not done to enforce the law he will take the matters into his own hands, and see that the next grand jury is instructed to make a careful investigation.

Accidentally Shot.

Mendota.—Carl Guinong, a farmer, was accidentally shot by his twelve-year-old son Willis. The bones in the right ankle were so badly shattered that the physicians at the hospital say that it will be necessary to amputate the foot. The boy intended to go rabbit hunting after dinner. He went upstairs to get his father's shotgun and took it into the kitchen. He had cleaned the gun, and placed a shell in the chamber as he was about to leave the house. His mother and father were sitting beside a stove. He started to examine the gun and as he did so he was it was discharged accidentally. The shot penetrated the bottom of his mother's skirt and the charge lodged in the lower part of his father's right ankle.

Silk Mill.

Brainerd.—C. H. Paine is authority for the statement that a silk mill is to be established near Smiley. Mr. Paine says a Chicago man has just completed the purchase of eighty acres of land of land near there and will at once begin the construction of a mill. He says the mill will be built at Smiley in order to avoid labor troubles, which in the larger cities have interfered more or less with the operation of the plant. It is said that fifty girls will be employed.

News Notes.

St. Paul—The railroad rate hearing was adjourned to March 26.

Minneapolis—Harry A. Kennedy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Kennedy, of 2504 Fourth avenue S, and one of the best-known mining engineers in the country, was instantly crushed to death, 1,200 feet below the service, in the Plymouth mine at Butte, Mont.

Two Harbors—A Scandinavian named Nels Erickson, about 40 years of age, died from injures sustained while at work for the Drake & Stratton company at Alborn, in northern St. Louis county.

South St. Paul—Barney Regan, weighmaster for the Western Weighing association, and his family were nearly suffocated by coal gas at their residence. Mrs. Regan is still in a precarious condition.

St. Paul—The supreme court has decided that the municipal court of Minneapolis has jurisdiction to try cases arising anywhere in Hennepin county which are within the jurisdiction of the justice court.

Minneapolis.—H. E. Cobb's residence in the Linden Hills district, was ransacked from top to bottom by burglars, who obtained only some small change for their trouble.

Minneapolis—Practically the last of the personal property lost by guests in the West Hotel fire of Jan. 10 was recovered when the valuable personal effects of J. B. Peisinger were found by John Gustafson, the house detective.

St. Paul—Grant Vant Sant and L. G. Hoffmann are suggested by Republican organizations as candidate for mayor.

BABY COVERED WITH SORES.

Would Scratch and Tear the Flesh Unless Hands Were Tied—"Would Have Died But for Cuticura."

"My little son, when about a year and a half old, began to have sores come out on his face. I had a physician treat him, but the sores grew worse. Then they began to come on his arms, then on other parts of his body, and then one came on his chest, worse than the others. Then I called another physician. Still he grew worse. At the end of about a year and a half of suffering he grew so bad I had to tie his hands in cloths at night to keep him from scratching the sores and tearing the flesh. He got to be a mere skeleton, and was hardly able to walk. My Aunt advised me to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I sent to the drug store and got a cake of the Soap and a box of the Ointment, and at the end of about two months the sores were all well. He has never had any sores of any kind since. He is now strong and healthy, and I can sincerely say that only for your most wonderful remedies my precious child would have died from those terrible sores. Mrs. Egbert Sheldon, R. F. D. CONGRESSIONAL NEWS.

All records in the house were broken when the representatives by a vote of 346 to 7 passed the Hepburn bill to give the people relief from unjust railroad rates.

The pension appropriation bill, carrying $139,000,000 for pensions and $1,245,000 for pension administration, was taken up, debated and passed without amendment.

Senator LaFollette introduced a bill in the senate prohibiting federal officials from asking or accepting railroad or other passes and prohibiting railroads from granting them. It imposes penalties for violations of the law.

Senator Patterson, of Colorado, was rebuked and invited out of the party by his Democratic colleagues for violating the caucus rule.

The house got the interstate commerce commission's report on the alleged trust between the Pennsylvania Railroad company and several other lines. It fails to show an illegal merger.

President Roosevelt, in a letter to congress, urges that a better law for punishing hazing be passed, so that midshipmen be not dismissed for boyish pranks, although he would be severe with brutes.

NEWS OF MINERS.

The coal operators and railroads have begun gathering an enormous supply of fuel in anticipation of a strike April 1.

Miners and operators may call on President Roosevelt to mediate in the wage dispute and thus avoid a strike.

Coal railroad men and mine operators met in New York to make plans to combat the threatened mine strike, which, with millions of tons of fuel now stored, they are ready to welcome.

President Dolan, of the Pittsburg district miners' union, refused a demand for his resignation on account of voting with operators in recent wage-scale conference.

The coal trust faces an attack in the courts of its own state. A resolution was introduced in the Pennsylvania legislature demanding action by the attorney general and it seems certain of passage.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The supreme court of Illinois in Springfield administered the last legal death blow to the hopes of Johann Hoch, the Chicago wife murderer. The petition of his attorneys for a rehearing of his appeal was decided against him. Unless Gov. Deneen gives another reprieve, Hoch will be hanged February 23.

The executive committee of the Trans-Mississippi congress fixed upon Tuesday, November 20, 1906, in Kansas City, Mo., as the time and place of the seventeenth congress. The session will continue four days.

Gov. Patterson, of Ohio, signed the two-cent fare bill passed by the legislature, and it is now a law. It provides that two sents shall be the maximum rate charged in Ohio for transporting passengers on the railroads of Ohio for all distances in excess of five miles.

The jury in a Milwaukee, Wis., court brought in a verdict of acquittal in the case of Herman Haasch, former chairman of the county board, charged with accepting a bribe in connection with county building contracts.

Wisconsin farmers held a convention in Madison and adopted resolutions insisting on general tariff and rate reform.

Russian rebels have ceased activity for the present and are preparing for a new uprising in the spring.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

BUDGET OF CURRENT TOPICS FROM NATIONAL CAPITAL.

SENATORS DEPEW AND PLATT

Both Are Expected to Retire from Public Life at the Close of This Session—Buffalo Jones Provides a Feast.

WASHINGTON.—There is no more pathetic sight in public life to-day than the struggle of Senator Chauncey M. Depew, of New York, to maintain his former debonair manner and to be the genial, popular after-dinner orator and man of affairs he has always been. He now must put forth a strong effort even to smile, where formerly he threw back his head and laughed with the zest and heartiness of a care-free boy. When he thinks anyone is looking at him he forces a smile and attempts his old jauntiness of manner, but when the effort has passed he ages ten years in a minute. He seems to shrink down in his seat, his face becomes gray and the lines of age are plainly drawn.

The senator and his relatives deny that he is subject to aphasia, but there has been unmistakable evidence that this malady has taken hold of him. Grave fears are entertained that its appearance is a sign of physical and mental breaking up. It is well remembered here that the first indication of the collapse of the late Admiral William T. Sampson was his inability to remember names and dates and the use of wrong words to express his ideas. Senator Depew is watched very closely by his niece, Miss Paulding, and he has been forced by her to appear in his place in the senate. One bad feature of his condition is his aversion to mingle with his old colleagues. He has conceived the notion that they have lost faith in him.

Senator Platt Failing.

WHILE Senator Depew gives evidence of decaying at the top, his colleague, Senator Platt is withered and palsied in everything but his brain. Anyone to see Mr. Platt virtually carried into the senate chamber would wonder how a man in his enfeebled condition could live 24 hours. His shrunken frame, fleshless hands and emaciated limbs show little or no life. He looks as though he did not weight 100 pounds. His brain, however, is as active as ever and through his indomitable will he keeps at work and manages occasionally to get to his seat in the senate chamber.

Recently, in conversation with an old-time friend, he confided to the latter that he proposed to retire from the senate after this session has closed. He said he did not care to resign now, as it would precipitate a fight for his seat, and conditions were not favorable for such a contest in New York at this time. This means that Senator Platt has not yet completed plans for the election of a man whom he wants to succeed him.

Like Senator Depew, Mr. Platt believes that he has outlived his political generation. In the confidence of his home he will talk freely of the ingratitude of the Republican party. He will rehearse the battles he has fought for the party and men whom he has made politically, and the disappointments they have brought him. His only desire now he says is to leave public life, retire to his farm in New York state, and spend what may remain of life to him in seclusion and away from the turmoil and care of politics.

A New American Meat.

A NUMBER of public men in Washington had a rare treat a short time ago when their dinner tables were furnished with a new kind of meat. The statesmen partook of catalo steak and roasts, and have pronounced it the finest meat that man ever ate. This treat was furnished by "Buffalo" Jones, of Arizona, who is known the country over for his efforts to preserve a remnant of the buffaloes, but more particularly for his breeding of a hybrid known as the catalo, which is a cross of ordinary cattle with the buffalo. He had a specimen of this hybrid cattle killed on his ranch and the meat sent on to Washington, where he distributed it among a number of his friends.

Mr. Jones was the first to evolve the idea of crossing the buffalo and the ordinary cow, and he is enthusiastic in his statements of the results of his experiments. The Government, through the department of agriculture, has been assisting him. The catalo, as he calls the hybrid, has all the desirable qualities of both classes of its ancestors and those who have partaken of the meat say it has even a finer grain and more delicate flavor than the beef steer of old.

During his visit to Washington Mr. Jones gave a lecture on the catalo, and told a large audience all about his pets. He had photographs and moving pictures with which to illustrate his talk. While he had frequently discussed the wonders of the catalo with his friends in Washington, this time he was determined to prove that the animal was no myth. So he produced the carcass of the real animal and distributed choice cuts of meat to some senators and representatives, not forgetting a generous roast to Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, who is very much interested in this experiment of Mr. Jones, which it is hoped will give the country an entirely new meat animal.

Busy New Congressman.

VISITORS at the capitol these days may behold on the floor of the house a man dressed in stylish tan clothes who always seems busy. Or as they pass through the public corridor they will see the same man converting a quiet niche in the wall into a committee room. This quiet-looking man is invariably engaged in dictating letters to his stenographer and attending to congressional business, entirely oblivious of the streams of humanity which whirl about him.

This man is Rockwood Hoar, a distinguished son of his distinguished father. He is the son of the late Senator George F. Hoar, and inherits much of the ability and independence of his father. He was one of three republicans who recently voted for an amendment to the Philippine tariff bill which was intended to grant independence to the Filipino. He believes, as did his father, that the United States should relinquish its sovereignty over the Philippines and give to that people the right of self-government. Mr. Hoar made no speech on the subject, but with his colleague, Mr. McCall, of Massachusetts, and Mr. Fordney, of Michigan, he registered his opinion in his vote.

Mr. Hoar, being a new member, does not have a committee room of his own, and he cannot take his stenographer on the floor, so, as he is a busy man, he keeps his stenographer out in the corridor between two pillars while he dictates to him a lot of correspondence.

The Railroad Pass.

THE cutting off of free railroad passes by most of the railroads in the country has been the subject of comment, and no end of amusement among public men. Maj. McDowell, of Pennsylvania, clerk of the house of representatives, who is famous for his humor and wit, declares that the abolition of the passes is contrary to good order. And he can prove it. The other day he had to go to his home in Pennsylvania, and for the first time in too many years for him to remember exactly, he bought a railroad ticket. He said he went up to the ticket window and asserted his rights as an American citizen to purchase a ticket. Much to his surprise the gentleman in charge took his money and gave him a ticket in return.

The major at once went to the capitol, and after a number of congressmen had assembled in his office to listen to his good stories and smoke his good cigars, the major determined to give them ocular proof that he was a free and independent American citizen who could pay his own way. "Gentlemen," he said, "I am no corporation controlled creature. The railroads cannot buy me with a paltry pass. I have paid good honest money for a first-class ticket and if you don't believe me, there it is."

The major reached into his pocket to pull out his ticket, but a look of surprise came over his face when he did not find the little piece of cardboard; then he looked all through his clothes and his pocketbook, but no railroad ticket appeared. "There," he said, "I knew that nothing but evil would come from this unjust ruling of the railroads. I never lost a railroad pass in my life, and here the first railroad ticket I have bought in a great number of years I lose in an hour after I leave the office."

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Factory Inspection.

Minneapolis.—According to the factory inspection report for the city by the state labor bureau, there are in the city 38,236 wage-earners. Included in this are the wage-earners employed in the suburban establishments of Columbia Heights, Hopkins, St. Anthony Park, St. Louis park and Wayzata. Of the total number of wage-earners, 28,781 are adult males, 8619 adult females, and 833 children under 16 years of age, or 616 boys and 217 girls. The largest number of persons during the last year were employed in the flour and grist milling industry; they represented 6.5 per cent of the total or 2,473 persons. Of this number, 98 per cent were adult males, 1.9 per cent adult females and 0.1 per cent boys under 16 years of age. In the printing and allied trades, there were found 2,250 wage-earners, of which 80.4 per cent were adult males, 17.8 per cent adult females and 1.8 per cent children.

Railroad Taxes.

St. Paul.—Fears that the railroads of the state would contest the payment of a 4 per cent gross earnings tax upon their business in the state were set at rest when the Omaha paid its tax in full on its business for 1905. The company had paid in $150,000 during the last three weeks, and sent in its check to complete the payment of the tax of $163,826.43, a 4 per cent tax on gross earnings amounting to $4,098,160.63. The business of the road shows a considerable increase and the taxes show an increase of almost 50 per cent. The gross earnings for 1904 were $3,863,886 78, on which it paid a 3 per cent tax amounting to $115,016 13. The Great Northern also send a check of $50,000 in part payment of its taxes, making a total of $300,000 paid this year.

Capitol too Small.

St. Paul.—The capitol commission invited the state dairy and food department and the state board of health to move from their present quarters on the ground floor of the new capitol to rooms in the old statehouse. The commission does not insist that both make the change, but is anxious that one should. This is because of insistance of the secretary of state for additional room for his documentary department. When the capitol was planned, it was arranged to give the secretary of state torney general got the rooms. Peter E. Hanson, secretary of state, has never been quite satisfied with the rooms which he now occupies, and because of his protestation the commission is trying to get ground floor quarters for his documentary department, now lodged in the dark and damp basement.

Mad Dog Bites Boy.

Detroit.—Conrad Glaum, the thirteen-year-old son of County Treasurer Glaum, has been taken to the Pasteur institute at Chicago for treatment. He was bitten about a month ago by a large Newfoundland dog which showed signs of rabies. The dog was killed and its head sent to the state authorities for examination, and upon the receipt of their report the lad was hurried to Chicago for treatment. Two horses also bitten by the dog have since died from hydrophobia.

Good Roads.

Washington.—It is announced that the agricultural department has agreed to construct one mile of model road each in Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana, provided the co-operation of the state or county authorities can be secured. It is proposed to do the work next summer, the federal government providing the necessary machinery and expert roadmakers.

Killed by Train.

Hawley.—Barrington Carlson, a young farmer living near Hitterdal, was struck by a freight train and instantly killed. He was driving with another man and the sleigh was hit by the train while trying to cross the track. Carlson was seated in the rear and received the full force of the collision. The driver and horses escaped uninjured.

Elevator Burned.

Orelans.—The large Mikkleson grain elevator has been destroyed by fire, together with its contents. The elevator contained seven thousand bushels of wheat and a quantity of flax. The fire is supposed to have been caused by spontaneous combustion. The building was insured, but the loss on the grain will be heavy.

St. Paul—The salaries of the school teachers are to be increased $50 a year until the maximum is reached.

St. Paul—The street car company payed the city's claim of $1,002 for work done on Fourth street ten years ago.

Pipestone—Robert Farmer, one of the prominent residents of this community, was found dead in a barn at Airlie, about ten miles west of this place.

St. Paul.—The St. Paul Y. M. C A. defeats Company C of Hudson at basketball, 54 to 25.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription [illegible] $1.00 per year if advance [illegible] in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-[illegible] gust 30, 1905, at the post of[illegible] Minn. under the Act of [illegible] h 3, 1879.

Say, if the convention will be unable to agree upon a suitable candidate for governor, why not harmonize union [illegible] celebrate a certain republican [illegible] by choosing a man [illegible] but pleasing to all [illegible]. That party is Elias Steenerson. This is one way to solve the mystic question which is liable to perplex the next [illegible] convention. —Olberg Journal.

Just now the [illegible] is the presentation of some kind of a wedding [illegible] Miss Alice Roosevelt. From an autograph to an automobile, [illegible] harp to a pipe organ, everything visible will be sent to Washington. What a collection of gifts will be placed before [illegible] when she and Nick Longsworth, are wedded may be imagined. It is safe to say that they will not be listed, nor is it likely that she will ever see the tenth part of them. Hubby Nick, being wealthy, will likely have a curio cabinet made, large enough to contain them and they will be stored away for the curious to view when not otherwise engaged.

FROM "WHITTLING JOHN."

"That with the exception of two small stores, there is not a mercantile establishment or commercial center where people gather or congregate, closer than twenty miles to said Sunbeam p.o. the place where said "Sunbeam" is supposed to be published, and that said Sunbeam P. O. is about sixteen miles from any railway station, that the land for miles around the vicinity is only partially setled with scarcely any improvements thereon: that nearly all of said setlers are homesteaders, who live on their claims only a portion of the year, a large portion of them moveing into the cities and villages during the winter months, and return to their claims in the spring of the year".

The above quotation is taken from an affidavit filed before the U.S. Land Office at Crookston on December 11th, 1905 by John Eastman publisher of the Thief River Falls News, it needs no answer to, the people who are living on this reservation and expect to make their home here, but we did answer it before the Department of the Interior, as such ridiculous rot, sworn to by a man living in a city, (and is supposed to have brains enough to publish a newspaper) is liable to do the honest settlers on this reservation a great injustice.

Before we are done with Mr Eastman and the other members of his "pot gang trio", they will find out whether THE SUNBEAM, is supposed to be published or not, and we believe they will be willing to sware, that it IS published and comes out regulary on every Friday.

The Fall of the Hennins.

The hennins or headdresses worn by ladies of the fifteenth century were in shape of horns and so long that a woman's face appeared to be in the center of her figure. The clergy condemned them and threatened the wearers with perdition, but for all that they were worn higher than ever. At last a strolling evangelist at Paris promised absolution to all who would destroy the hennins, and the mob went to work and wrecked the headdresses whenever they appeared in public. The hennins were trampled under foot and their wearers insulted all over Paris. Scores of lives were lost in the efforts of the cavaliers to defend the hennins from the rabble, but in vain, and the enormous headdresses disappeared, some other feminine absurdity taking their place.

Rhoda, Minn.,
Feb'y, 15th. 1906.

Editor Sunbeam,

Permit me to say a few words in answer to the Eastman, Latta, affidavits, which we were shown the other day. We took particular notice of the Eastman, affidavit which is indeed one of the most degrading documents that has ever been filed before any department of justice, and against a civilized community. The document in itself contained about one tenth truth, and ninety per cent falsehood. Its first allegation was, that the Sunbeam, was printed in a partetion 8x10, that is false, it also stated, that the Sunbeam, was 16 miles from the nearest railroad station, according to government maps, that is false, it also stated, that there were only two small stores, for miles and miles, that is false, it also stated, that the country was mostly unsettled and about uninhabited, and people that did have homesteads, only lived on them during the summer months and that they had scarsely any improvements thereon, and that they did not comply with the homestead laws in that respect, it seems, that is the biggest falsehood of all. The writer of this item, was one of the first that made final proof in this vicinity, and are proud to say that we complied with the homestead laws in ever respect, and we are still living here and intend to do so in the future. We know of but one party that has left after proving up, and he was from Thief River Falls, and perhaps, one of Eastman's best friends. It is indeed true that there may be cases where homesteaders have not been able to comply with the homestead laws, in full, but it were not because they were taking in the pleasures of city life, by long ways. Any man that is a little acquainted with frontier life, and the hardships that pioneers are exposed to, cant help but say; after passing through this reservation, and note the great advance that is made in one year, that the homesteaders that have made their homes here, are men that expect to make a headway, men that expect to do their duty as residents and citizens of their respective communities, regardless of Eastman's allegations. We must indeed say, that we fail to see what object Eastman, had in view when he filed this affidavit, it seems as if he had a grudge against every homesteader on this reservation, because editor Hunt, happened to get a few more final proof notices then he did. For this reason he thought he had a right to molest a lot of innocent homesteaders, and cause the government officials to suspicion every man that wants to make final proof, so that they could gaurd them as they would a criminal. He furthermore alledges that editor Hunt, was not a fit man to run a newspaper and did not have material enough to put out a sheet that could be classed as a "Newspaper" according to the Statues, and that his only aim and object was to "ush in" all the final proof notices only. Eastman, overlooked the fact that editor Hunt, was a homesteader, and that the Sunbeam, was a stationary concern, thus far we havn't heard of the editors intention of placing the Sunbeam on "wheels" nor has he applied for a "balloon" that we know of, so, to judge from that the Sunbeam is here to stay. Editor Hunt, makes errors, we admit, and so does Eastman, in the same line of work, but the biggest mistake he ever made in his life was when he undertook to [illegible] [illegible] ingeniously with editor [illegible]. Its also noticed in this document of his, where he goes on and says that he has been in newspaper business in this city for eight long years. Now if this is the fact that his aims and objects in the newspaper line, during all this time, has been in accordance with the facts and views that he upholds in this sworn affidavit of his, why we do really have pity on his forlorn lot of subscribers, whether they number fifty or five hundred

A Remarkable Bridge.

Among the many odd nooks and corners and crannies of the auld Emerald Isle is Carrick-a-rede, on the Great Northern railroad of Ireland. It is an isolated rock, separated from the mainland by a chasm sixty feet wide and more than eighty feet deep, and it is at this place that the salmon are intercepted in their retreat to the rivers. A rude bridge of ropes is thrown across, which remains during the fishing season, and this bridge, which is protected by a single rope rail, swings about in the most uncomfortable manner, often rendering it a dangerous feat in stormy weather save to the natives, who cross it with the utmost indifference. The name is derived from "Carrig-a-rambaidh" (the rock in the road) on account of the intercepting of the salmon. Near by on the west side of the island is a cavern in which have been found the bones of horse, ox, deer, sheep, goat, badger, otter, water rat and of several kinds of birds.

Two Odd Volumes.

The book done by a French monk who instead of writing the words cut the letters from the vellum page and formed a sort of stencil has its opposite in a Swedish translation of the four gospels, which was done in gold and silver leaf. The initial letters are cut from thin sheets of beaten gold done in delicate tracery, while the body of the text is of heavy silver. The foil is cemented to the parchment page with an adhesive which in spite of the undoubted antiquity of the book has not lost its powers. Most freak books were evidently done to perpetuate the name of the ingenious owner, but this carries absolutely no information as to its maker.

A more modern freak is the output of a Lyons silk weaving firm and is a prayer book in which the letters are woven into the silk. But one copy was made of the book, and this is in the government library at Paris.

Physical Culture.

A rational system of physical culture should insure to every man and woman who adopts it a perfectly erect, poised figure, a straight spine, a broad, deep and capacious chest, uplifted and flexible, and harmonious development of all the muscles. He or she should be easy and graceful in every movement, possessed of marked muscular power and endurance, splendid health and a voice of notable equality and power.

So much would the rational system of physical development do for those who followed it, and any other method which will not accomplish all of these things, even for its least promising students, is in so much incomplete and false. The object of physical culture methods is to render the body a more perfect instrument, more strong, more enduring, more obedient to the commands of the will.—Outing Magazine.

Blessing the River.

In the little Balkan state of Roumania it has been the custom from time immemorial for towns by the river Danube to keep the Christmas feast by a peculiar ceremony called "blessing the river." This used to be carried out on a scaffolding erected on the frozen river, but owing to an accident, when the ice broke, and hundreds of people were drowned, it is now held upon the bank. The people wear turbans of colored paper and carry long white wands. Some are dressed to represent Biblical characters. The service, conducted by priests, lasts about half an hour, and then the ice is broken and a small wooden cross thrown into the water. Then people rush into the icy river after this emblem, and the person who secures it is supposed to be assured of great good luck for the coming year.

Nilsson and Patti.

When Christine Nilsson, the great singer, was asked her opinion of various singers, she gave it very candidly of every one, including herself and Mme. Albani, but she never once alluded to Mme. Patti.

"You have not mentioned Mme. Patti," remarked the pertinacious interviewer.

"No," said Mme. Nilsson. "I have not. You are asking about singers. I do not regard Patti as a singer. I place her among the angels. A Patti only comes to a planet once during that planet's existence." Such an absence of stage jealousy has probably never been equaled.

Date Mark a Bagdad Malady.

Bagdad date mark is the name given to a mysterious disease that attacks nearly every one who stays in Bagdad for any length of time and is prevalent also at Aleppo and other places in Turkish Asia. It is a sore that comes only once, but lasts a year, leaving a scar the shape of a date. Nearly all the natives are marked with it. No remedy has been found for it, but hyposulphite of soda seems to have some effect on the mark.

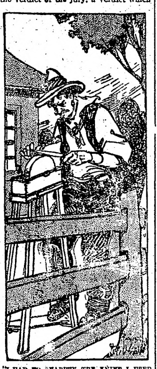
Cut Up The Body

The Remarkable Case of an Italian Who Killed His Own Wife.

He Told on the Stand Without a Tremor of Dismembering the Corpse of His Spouse.

Legal circles in Europe, says the Green Bag, have been recently stirred up over a case of uxoricide in Italy, which presented unusual features both as regards the act and actor as well as the verdict of the jury, a verdict which satisfied no one except the accused. The crime committed by Alberto Olivo belongs to the kind conveniently classed under the doings of Jack the Ripper. He killed his wife by stabbing her, and, having carefully cut up the body, threw the larger members into the sea. How this was done was graphically described with scientific precision by the accused, who took the stand in his own behalf. In fact, he seemed to wish to aid justice even to the extent of setting the experts right.



"I HAD TO SHARPEN THE KNIFE I USED IN KILLING HER."

"I used the same knife in dismembering her body," he testified, "that I used in killing her, but I had to have it sharpened, as the blade became dull in striking the bone."

The exact manner of death was uncertain, the accused himself despite his frankness not being clear on the point. When asked to explain the statement that after striking his wife, who was in bed, with a knife he fell down he replied that he meant that he fainted or lost consciousness—in the sense used by the poet Dante. And he cited two passages from the "Divine Comedy" to make his meaning clear.

He awoke from such faint or stupor in about an hour, when he saw that his wife had three knife wounds in the head. The medical experts, however had ascertained that there had been a hemorrhage from a wound on the nose. Confronted with this testimony, the accused answered naively: "The experts state it was produced by a wound on the nose. It is and has been my opinion that such nasal wound was superficial. The experts declared it deep. All right. My wife ever since she was a servant at Vercelli was subject to frequent nose bleeding and also to heart trouble. I think these two combined to cause the hemorrhage in question. True it is that I found a little puddle of blood in the middle of the bed. The blood had not spread. However, the hemorrhage was not as heavy as the experts would make it. Suffice it that I cleaned up the blood without trouble. At most it must have been about a quart."

Again, the experts having testified that three ribs had been found broken and that such fractures must have antedated death, the accused gave his own views thereon.

"I do not believe that," he testified. "But it would be impossible for me to ascertain whether those ribs broken by me after by wife's death are those exactly which the experts claim were broken before her death."

Pressed by the question, "Do you or don't you know about this?" he set the audience laughing by this reply. "If the experts don't know it for certain, is it not natural I shouldn't be positive either?"

He must have taken a certain pride in his work of dismemberment, for he hotly denied that it took him twelve hours to cut up the body. "Two and a half hours at the [illegible] most," he said. "Twelve hours would have been necessary for a large [illegible] twice the size of my wife."

Motive, if motive it could be called for the crime, was that his wife was a fearful nag. He was a man of some schooling and a certain intelligence, while she was a rather common person, a domestic by trade.

"When you married her," he was asked, "you knew that your wife was an ignorant woman, did you not?" His

Hearses After Night.

There is one kind of vehicle that neither the oldest nor the youngest inhabitant has seen on the street at night, or, if he has seen it at all, only infrequently. That is a hearse. Every other kind of conveyance used by modern man is driven about the streets freely after nightfall—the hearse alone comes under the curfew law. Early hours seem to be imposed upon that somber carriage by common consent. The public doesn't like to see it after dark, and coachmen don't like to drive it. No doubt there are hearses that are compelled by the exigencies of funeral arrangements to come home at unseasonable hours, but when forced to an infringement of the unwritten law they proceed through quiet streets where they will be least likely to wound the sensibilities of the superstitious.—New York Herald.

Character Shown In Work.

A foolish person builds foolishly, and a wise one sensibly, a virtuous one beautifully and a vicious one badly. If stonework is well put together it means that a thoughtful man cut it and an honest man cemented it. If it has too much ornament it means that its carver was too greedy of pleasure, if too little that he was rude or insensitive or stupid or the like. A man may hide himself from you or misrepresent himself to you every other way, but he cannot in his work. There be sure you have him to the utmost, all that he likes, all that he sees, all that he can do—his imagination, his affection, his perserverance, his impatience, clumsiness, cleverness, everything is there. If the work is a cobweb you know it was made by a spider, if a honeycomb by a bee, a wormcast is thrown up by a worm and a nest wreathed by a bird, and a house is built by a man worthily if he is worthy and ignobly if he is ignoble. And always, from the least to the greatest, as a thing made is good or bad so is the maker of it.

Animals' Play Is Exercise.

The relaxed rhythmical movements so common among animals at play, the gamboling of lambs, the play of kittens and many similar animal activities, are imitated by man in the primitive dances which form so large a part in the social and religious life of all aboriginal peoples. These motions of leaping, swinging, swaying and twisting of the body have, all of them, a most intimate and powerful influence upon the body's activities, organic and muscular. Rolling is a form of exercise which is a favorite with many animals and is especially practiced for the purpose of relieving fatigue. Rolling is peculiarly enjoyable and grateful to the animal because it provides not only relief for the tensed muscles, the depleted organs and the slow moving circulation, but because as the animal rolls the firm pressure of the ground upon his body constitutes a most effective and agreeable massage.

A Precise Answer.

"Lawyers are supposed to be the most literal minded men," said an eminent member of the bar, "but every now and then counsel in course of practice will encounter witnesses who can give them points in the matter of literal answers. An Irishman was called to testify in a damage suit arising out of the death of a man 'at the hands of a bull,' so to speak.

"'Are we to understand, sir,' asked the prosecuting attorney, 'that the deceased, Patrick Flannigan, was your father?'

"'He was till the bull killed him,' was the reply of the wary witness."

Butchery In War.

In one of Du Guesclin's victories so many English were taken captive that even the humblest soldier among the French had one or more prisoners. The victors, however, fell to quarreling, and, ill feeling becoming rife in the French army in consequence of these quarrels over the prisoners, Du Guesclin ordered all the captives to be butchered, and the brutal order was carried out.

How She Knew.

Mr. McSosh—What was it that made you think I'd been drinking last night? Mrs. McSosh—Oh, I don't know. I suppose the fact that you were fearfully drunk had as much to do with it as anything.—Cleveland Leader.

Only Pine Martens.

A series of grewsome incidents had terrified an English neighborhood. What made these incidents peculiarly horrible was their tragic mystery. Nobody could explain them. Sheep and lambs, which were in full health over night, were found dead in the morning, their bodies uninjured, but drained of every drop of blood. Ghouls and vampires and all imaginable horrors were blamed, and the whole countryside was up. The damage continued and in a single night a farmer had fourteen out of twenty-one lambs killed, and the same pen was chosen the next night, and the remaining seven lambs were destroyed. In the early peep of day the slayers were discovered, all hideous from their sanguinary work. They were neither men nor monsters, but a couple of pine martens which, having routed a pair of magpies from their nest, had there made their home and thence nightly scoured the country round about.

Indispensability.

"No," said a lecturer, "it doesn't do to get swelled head and think you're indispensable to the welfare of the world.

"I was in the lobby of a big hotel in Cincinnati when a bus load of traveling salesmen came from the station. Every man of them as he signed the register paused to shake hands with the hotel clerk, a fatherly old fellow who had been there many years.

"'Ah,' said one of them to the clerk 'it's a good thing you're still on deck Uncle Dave. I don't think the house could run without you.'

"'Couldn't it,-just!' said Uncle Dave 'You fellows would come in here, and if there was a strange clerk you'd say "Where's Uncle Dave?"

"'And the clerk would say: "Why didn't you hear? He died a month ago."

"'And then you'd say: "Well, I'll be darned! That's too bad. Say, when'l dinner be ready?"'"

Shortsighted Animals.

So far as naturalists have been able to ascertain there is no such thing as shortsight among animals in a state of nature. In the case, however, of domestic animals and wild ones in confinement shortsight is by no means unknown. Many people who have kept dogs and cats will remember instances of pets which were unable to distinguish friends from strangers at a short distance. Horses, too, frequently suffer from shortsight and other derangements of the vision, and this kind of thing is sometimes met with in the case of cattle. The diseases of the eye which frequently affect wild animals in captivity are to be chiefly attributed to the narrow space in which they are confined. The eyes are never exercised upon distant objects and therefore lose the powers which use of this kind calls forth.

The Glowworm Cavern.

The greatest wonder of the antipodes is the celebrated glowworm cavern, discovered in 1891 in the heart of the Tasmanian wilderness. The cavern or caverns (there appears to be a series of such caverns in the vicinity, each separate and distinct) are situated near the town of Southport, Tasmania, in a limestone bluff, about four miles from Ida bay. The appearance of the main cavern is that of an underground river, the entire floor of the subterranean passage being covered with water about a foot and a half in depth. These wonderful Tasmanian caves are similar to all caverns found in limestone formation, with the exception that their roofs and sides literally shine with the light emitted by the millions of glowworms which inhabit them.

Nose Drinking In Norway.

The Norwegian papers tell of a speedy and efficacious method of becoming intoxicated prevailing in the slums of Christiania. The Orebladet describes how it is done. The drunkard fills the palm of his hand with "aquevit" (strong corn brandy) and sniffs it through his nose. A few applications do the work, while the same quantity of liquor taken into the stomach would hardly be felt. "Nose drinking" has become a real vice with some individuals. The effect of it is terrible, because the whole nervous system is paralyzed in a moment, and the drunkard remains almost unconscious for several minutes. Afterward a sleepy fatigue is felt, as after smoking opium.

Not an Arrest, but a Rescue.

"You were arrested for striking your wife."

"No, judge," answered the unworthy specimen of manhood who was on trial; "I had made a pass at her, and she was just reachin' for the stove lid when the officers came and took me in charge. That wasn't an arrest. That was a rescue."—Washington Star.

A Powerful Drug.

Cloves are simply the dried flower buds of a beautiful evergreen tree growing naturally on the Spice islands. These flower buds are gathered when they have become of a bright red and are just on the point of opening. The name comes from the resemblance of the prepared spice to small nails, from the French word clou, for nail. Cloves are very heavily charged with a pungent, acrid, volatile oil, as much as 20 per cent sometimes being extracted. This oil is valuable for flavoring and scenting purposes and has a limited field in medicine, but the habit of "eating cloves," in which young folks and too often old ones indulge, is very reprehensible, as the oil is a powerful drug, becoming in many cases an insidious poison.

How Some Mutes Marry.

Statistics compiled by authorities on the condition of the deaf and dumb in this country present one significant fact in regard to the matrimonial affairs of that body of citizens. It is revealed therein that while many women deprived of the power of speech have been sought in marriage by men whose five senses were unimpaired only a few women whose tongues were in good working order have consented to tie themselves to men who could not hear what was being said. Cynics find in these revelations matter for many satiric diatribes pertaining to the conversational and listening powers of the sexes. Whether or not these sarcastic observations contain an explanation of the comparative willingness and unwillingness of men and women to marry mutes is a question, but the fact [illegible]

DEATH SEEMED NEAR.

How a Chicago Woman Found Help When Hope Was Fast Fading Away.

Mrs. E. T. Gould, 914 W. Lake St., Chicago, Ill., says: "Doan's Kidney Pills are all that saved me from death by Bright's Disease, that I know. I had eye trouble, backache, catches when lying abed or when bending over, was languid and often dizzy and had sick headaches and bearing down pains. The kidney secretions were too copious and frequent, and very bad in appearance. It was in 1903 that Doan's Kidney Pills helped me so quickly and cured me of these troubles and I've been well ever since."

TOO ANXIOUS TO SELL.

Man with Stock Took the Wrong Course to Get It Off His Hands.

Dr. Washington Gladden was talking to two young men about the evil of speculation, relates an exchange.

"Speculation is gambling," he said. "It is injurious to the morals always, and in the majority of cases it is injurious to the bank account.

"Whenever I am tempted to speculate I think of Ben Smith and Asa Jones, of Pottsgrove, my native place. This thought causes me to refrain.

"Ben and Asa, out walking one afternoon, got to talking about money matters.

"'I have some lying idle,' said Ben Smith. 'I think I'll take a flyer in the stock market. What is the best stock to buy, Asa?'

"'Greenland Improvement Preferred is the best thing I know of,' Asa answered.

"'Where can I get some of it?' said Ben.

"Asa replied promptly:

"'I can let you have all you want.'"

When Everything, Including Marriage, Will Be Done in a Rush.

For various reasons Mr. Wilbur needed a wife. It was purely a business proposition," says the Yale Record. "Miss Tilghman," he asked, "do you play poker?"

"No," she answered.

"Or bridge?"

"No."

"Do you drink?"

"Not since I left college, and when I do come home late I don't make any noise. Poor papa was always fussy that way."

"What a model young lady you are, Miss Tilghman! Will you be my wife?"

"Just a minute, Mr. Wilbur. You're a graduate of the school for model housekeepers, aren't you?"

"Yes."

"And you took the course in nursing?"

"Yes."

"Very well, Bobby. Get the license and notify the parson, send out the invitations, order the wedding breakfast, telephone the tailor to get me a trousseau ready, write to Madge Carson, Bertie Hallowell, Mary Harkness, Laura Sands, and the Johnson girls to be my bridesmaids, and set the day some time in June. I've got a date with Hattie Loomis to run over to Paris in her new airbubble. Good-by! . . . What! You want a kiss? Mercy! You're not sentimental, are you?"

"O, no-o!"

"Well, good-by, Bobby! Get everything ready—and so long. I'm late now!"

WILD WITH ITCHING HUMOR.

Eruption Broke Out in Spots All Over Body—Cured at Expense of Only $1.25—Thanks Cuticura.

"The Cuticura Remedies cured me of my skin disease, and I am very thankful to you. My trouble was eruption of the skin, which broke out in spots all over my body, and caused a continual itching which nearly drove me wild at times. I got medicine of a doctor, but it did not cure me, and when I saw in a paper your ad., I sent to you for the Cuticura book and I studied my case in it. I then went to the drug store and bought one cake of Cuticura Soap, one box of Cuticura Ointment, and one vial of Cuticura Pills. From the first application I received relief. I used the first set and two extra cakes of Cuticura Soap, and was completely cured. I had suffered for two years, and I again thank Cuticura for my cure. Claude N. Johnson, Maple Grove Farm, R. F. D. 2, Walnut, Kan., June 15, 1905."

Mortifying.

There are a few solvent and respectable persons left in the country who have not yet been investigated. It begins to be embarrassing to a high soul not to have been found out. We are all miserable sinners. The prayer book says so. To have from a third to a half of our friends caught in some of their sins while ours continue private is conducive to self-contempt. It would be fairer to serve us out one suit of sackcloth apiece and ring in a general confession.—Life.

ANÆMIA CAN BE CURED

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Make New Blood and Strike Straight at the Root of Disease.

Anæmia is just the doctor's name for bloodlessness. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood. They cure anæmia just as food cures hunger. They cured Mrs. Thos. J. McGann, of 17 Lincoln Place, Plainfield, N.J., and they can do as much for any other pale, weak, ailing, bloodless person.

"In the spring of 1903 I did my usual house cleaning," says Mrs. McGann, "and soon afterward I began to have the most terrible headaches. My heart would beat so irregularly that it was painful and there came a morning when I could not get up. My doctor said I had anæmia and he was surprised that I had continued to live in the condition I was in. I was confined to my bed for nearly two months, the doctor coming every day for the first few weeks, but I did not improve to amount to anything.

"Altogether I was sick for nearly two years. I was as weak as a rag, had headaches, irregular heart beats, loss of appetite, cramps in the limbs and was unable to get a good night's sleep. My legs and feet were so swollen that I feared they would burst.

"One day, while I was wondering how long I could live, feeling as I did, I received a booklet telling about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I read it and told my husband to get me some of the pills. Before the first box was gone I felt a change for the better. I have taken about twelve boxes and although I was as near the grave as I could be, I now feel as if I had a new lease of life. I have no more headache, the heart beats regularly, my cheeks are pink and I feel ten years younger. I feel that I have been cured very cheaply and I have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to lots of my friends."

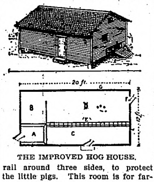
CONVENIENT HOG HOUSE.

Arrangement of Building Which One Farmer Has Found to Be Satisfactory.

Last fall we built the hog house illustrated herewith, writes a correspondent of the Ohio Farmer. It is 20 feet long, 12 feet wide, and seven feet high to the square. In the plan, C, is the hallway; D, the feeding floor; B, the sleeping room; A, room for brood sow; E, the trough; G, window for throwing out manure; F, the hog door. The partitions separating these rooms or divisions are four feet high. The partition between the hall, C, and the feeding floor, D, sets over the trough, E, leaving enough of the trough projecting into the hall so that slop can be poured in from the C side. There is a window in each end, and one in each end of attic. The sow room is provided with guard rail around three sides, to protect the little pigs. This room is for farrowing, with feeding floor in the yard outside. We got out all the frame timber on the farm, buying only the drop siding, shingles, window and the door and sash. The house is set up on stone pillars, leaving space underneath large enough for a dog to run through, so that there is no rat harbor. The artist did not get the partition between A, B and C, D, in proper position. D should be 12 feet long, and B eight feet. The bridge at hog door can be removed and put back at pleasure. The shingles on this house (3,000) cost $14.50; the drop siding, door frames, etc., about $20; the labor (outside of getting out the frame timber), about $22. We hired an extra hand two or three days to help cut logs and get them to the mill; the rest of that work was done by the farm manager and myself. The total cost of the building, including the painting, was not over $75. The floor is of two-inch hard maple and red beech plank, and the frame, rafters, lath, joist, partitions, etc., of beech. We shall have two more windows put in, and will then consider the house good enough for the purpose, and ample for a dozen head of swine besides the brood sow and pigs.



THE IMPROVED HOG HOUSE.

NEED OF VENTILATION.

A Low Temperature with Good Air Is Better Than Higher Temperature and Foul Air.

When it comes to the ventilation remember that the stable should be, normally, just warm enough to keep the cow comfortable. The old idea that to save feed and produce butter economically it should be 70 or even 60 degrees in the cold days of winter is long ago exploded. Better too much ventilation and too cool than too hot and stifling, declares C. D. Smith, of Michigan agricultural college.

Naturally, without artificial heat it is impossible to have the stable warm in the sense of above 60 degrees on cold days and at the same time well ventilated. The silo should be at one side with a ventilated space between it and the stable. The hay, if over the cows, should be supplied through a chute outside the stable but near enough to the feeding alley to avoid carrying a long distance and consequent dust.

THE LIVE STOCK.

Always use a thoroughbred sire and give him the best of care.

Unused horses and colts will require no grain if fed molasses with the hay.

Increase the herd gradually by careful selection, and keep it up to a high standard.

Try feeding molasses to a part of the horses or colts and note results. It is both economical and satisfactory.

Farmers who experience difficulty in making good silage, either cut the crop too green or else have improperly constructed silos.

Going into sheep growing? Pick out the highest, driest part of your farm. Sheep cannot go with wet feet. High and dry must be the rule with them.

Do not tempt your hogs by placing them in a ramshackly old pen. Make the pen good and strong. After a hog once gets out it is hard to keep him in.

It is estimated that the cost of maintaining 100 breeding ewes in condition is $1 per day, or one cent per head per day when kept on corn fodder, sugar beets and oats.—Farm Journal.

No Advantage in Cut Hay.

There is no particular advantage in cutting hay for horses. When the horses are worked hard, when the hay is very dusty, or when it appears necessary to dilute the grain ration, it may be well to cut and moisten the hay and mix in the grain.

Tumors Conquered Without Operations

Unqualified Success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in Cases of Mrs. Fox and Miss Adams.

Fannie Fox
Miss Luella Adams

So-called "wandering pains" may come from its early stages, or the presence of danger may be made manifest by excessive monthly periods accompanied by unusual pain extending from the abdomen through the groin and thighs.

If you have mysterious pains, if there are indications of inflammation, ulceration or displacement, don't wait for time to confirm your fears and go through the horrors of a hospital operation; secure Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once and begin its use and write Mrs. Pinkham of Lynn, Mass., for advice.

Read these strong letters from grateful women who have been cured:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:— (First Letter.)

"In looking over your book I see that your medicine cures Tumors. I have been to a doctor and he tells me I have a tumor. I will be more than grateful if you can help me, as I do so dread an operation."—Fannie D. Fox, Bradford, Pa.

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:— (Second Letter.)

"I take the liberty to congratulate you on the success I have had with your wonderful medicine.

"Eighteen months ago my periods stopped. Shortly after I felt so badly I submitted to a thorough examination by a physician, and was told that I had a tumor and would have to undergo an operation.

"I soon after read one of your advertisements and decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. After taking five bottles as directed, the tumor is entirely gone. I have again been examined by the physician and he says I have no signs of a tumor now. It has also brought my periods around once more; and I am entirely well. I shall never be without a bottle of Lydia Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the house."—Fannie D. Fox, Bradford, Pa.

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"About three years ago I had intense pain in my stomach, with cramps and raging headaches. The doctor prescribed for me, but finding that I did not get any better he examined me and, to my surprise, declared I had a tumor.

"I felt sure that it meant my death warrant, and was very disheartened. I spent hundreds of dollars in doctoring, but the tumor kept growing, till the doctor said that nothing but an operation would save me. Fortunately I corresponded with my aunt in one of the New England States, who advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before submitting to an operation, and I at once started taking a regular treatment, finding to my great relief that my general health began to improve, and after three months I noticed that the tumor had reduced in size. I kept on taking the Compound, and in ten months it had entirely disappeared without an operation, and using no medicine but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and words fail to express how grateful I am for the good it has done me."—Miss Luella Adams, Colonnade Hotel, Seattle, Wash.

Such unquestionable testimony proves the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and should give confidence and hope to every sick woman.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all ailing women to write to her at Lynn, Mass., for advice.

A BOY'S BREAKFAST.

There's a Natural Food That Makes Its Own Way.

There's a boy up in Hoosick Falls, N. Y., who is growing into sturdy manhood on Grape-Nuts breakfasts. It might have been different with him, as his mother explains:

"My 11-year-old boy is large, well developed and active, and has been made so by his fondness for Grape-Nuts food. At five years he was a very nervous child and was subject to frequent attacks of indigestion which used to rob him of his strength and were very troublesome to deal with. He never seemed to care for anything for his breakfast until I tried Grape-Nuts, and I have never had to change from that. He makes his entire breakfast of Grape-Nuts food. It is always relished by him and he says that it satisfies him better than the ordinary kind of a meal.

"Better than all, he is no longer troubled with indigestion or nervousness, and has got to be a splendidly developed fellow since he began to use Grape-Nuts food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

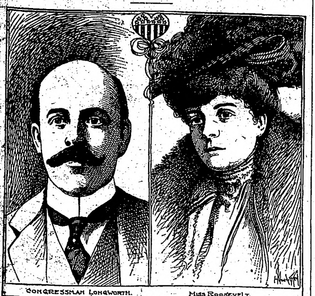
BRIDE AND GROOM AT WHITE HOUSE CEREMONY.



CONGRESSMAN LONGWORTH. MISS ROOSEVELT.

BRILLIANT WEDDING CEREMONY OCCURS AT THE WHITE HOUSE

Alice Roosevelt and Nicholas Longworth Married Amid Scenes of Splendor—Bishop Satterlee Officiates at Event—Distinguished Persons Present.

Washington.—Miss Alice Roosevelt, eldest daughter of the president of the United States, was married to Representative Nicholas Longworth, of Ohio, at noon Saturday, in the east room of the White House.

The most distinguished statesmen of the land, lights of literature, lions of society and captains of industry—men and women from every walk of life and from almost every clime and country of the globe came to pay homage to the happy couple and to swell the throng at the most brilliant wedding the capital has ever seen.

Thirty-seven foreign ambassadors and ministers were in attendance to extend the felicitations of their sovereigns and peoples. Cabinet officers, senators, the bridegroom's colleagues in the house and the intimate personal friends of the Roosevelt and Longworth families in Washington, New York and Cincinnati were included among the fortunate thousand invited to witness the marriage.

Assemblage Is Brilliant.

It was an assemblage of the elite in public and social life. Rivaling the splendid floral decorations of the famous state apartment were the gold-encrusted costumes and flashing orders of the diplomatic corps, to say nothing of the varicolored toilets of the women guests.

The White House never looked more beautiful than it did in its gala dress of bloom and verdure. For more than a week florists and decorators had been moving tropical plants into place and weaving garlands for the great event. The result as revealed when the doors were opened Saturday morning amply repaid all the care and labor bestowed on the task. The color scheme was white and green, ferns and lilies predominating.

Bishop Satterlee Officiates.

Rt. Rev. Henry Yates Satterlee, bishop of the diocese of Washington, performed the nuptial rites, using the stately ceremonial of the Protestant Episcopal church. President Roosevelt led his daughter to the altar and gave her to the young statesman from Ohio.

Miss Alice had no bridesmaids, for from her host of girl friends she could scarcely have selected any without hurting the feelings of the others. The bridegroom was attended by Thomas Nelson Perkins, of Boston, a member of the corporation of Harvard university.

Nearly all of the ushers were Harvard men. Indeed, the notable ceremony might well have been called a "Harvard wedding," for, with the father of the bride, the best man, and almost all of the other attendants enthusiastic alumni of the old school at Cambridge, the flag of crimson fairly divided honors with the orange blossoms and bride roses.

Mrs. Roosevelt Enters.

A few minutes before noon Mrs. Roosevelt, accompanied by the members of her immediate family, descended the main staircase, and, under the escort of several military aids, entered the east room by the main doors. She was escorted to a position on the left side of the platform, which was reserved for the bride's family. Designated members of the bridegroom's family, including his mother and sisters, already had taken their places on the right side of the platform. In order to keep a way clear for the wedding party white satin ropes were stretched from each side of the main entrance to the east room to posts located ten feet west of the platform and thence, around the platform, to points on the east wall.

Mrs. Roosevelt graciously acknowledged the greetings which she received on her entrance. She wore a superb gown, richly designed of heavy, cream-colored brocade, on which were figures of blue and brown interlaced with threads of gold. The gown was made in princess style, with a long train of the brocaded material. The trimmings were of brown chiffon, embroidered in blue and gold. The yoke of the bodice was formed of embroidered chiffon, as were the trimmings on the elbow sleeves. Exquisitely designed panels on the skirt were made of the blue and golden embroidery. She wore diamond ornaments.

Groom and Best Man Arrive.

Two or three minutes after the entrance of Mrs. Roosevelt the bridegroom, Mr. Longworth, accompanied by his best man, Thomas Nelson Perkins, of Boston, descended the staircase, and entering the east room, took his place at the foot of the platform to await the arrival of his bride.

Promptly on the stroke of noon Miss Roosevelt, escorted by the president, descended by the elevator to the west end of the main corridor. There awaiting them were the ushers selected by Mr. Longworth. All of them are long-time friends and several were the bridegroom's classmates at Harvard. They were Quincy A. Shaw, of Boston; Frederic Winthrop, of New York; Francis R. Bangs, of Boston; Guy Norman, of Boston; B. A. Ballingford, Jr., of Cincinnati; Lars Anderson, of Washington, D. C.; Vicomte Charles de Chambrun, of the French embassy, and Theodore Roosevelt, Jr.

Bride Enters with Father.

Preceded by the ushers, the president and the bride, resting her hand lightly within his left arm, proceeded to the east room, the orchestra rendering the magnificent march "Tannhauser." Miss Roosevelt never looked better. The classic beauty of her face and figure was accentuated by her exquisite attire and by the surroundings.

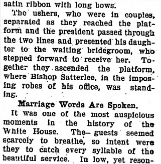
Her bridal dress was a magnificent creation of heavy white satin, point lace, chiffon, filmy tulle and silver brocade. The material from which the gown was developed was manufactured especially for Miss Roosevelt and the design was destroyed as soon as the necessary amount of the material was made. The gown had a long court train of superb silver brocade. The bodice was made high, without a collar, was trimmed with rare old point lace and the elbow sleeves were finished with the same filmy material. The sleeves just met the long white gloves.

A voluminous tulle veil, almost completely enveloping the slender, graceful figure of the charming bride, was held in place by dainty clusters of orange blossoms. The tiny slippers were fashioned from silver brocade and instead of buckles, tulle bows were worn with tiny clusters of orange flowers.

Jewels Worn by Bride.

The only jewels worn by the bride was a superb diamond necklace which was the gift of the groom.

Over her left arm Miss Roosevelt carried a superb shower bouquet of the rarest and daintiest white orchids procurable. The delicate blossoms were arranged in cascade form, the stems being tied with white chiffon satin ribbon with long bows.



BISHOP H. Y. SATTERLEE.

The ushers, who were in couples, separated as they reached the platform and the president passed through the two lines and presented his daughter to the waiting bridegroom, who stepped forward to receive her. Together they ascended the platform, where Bishop Satterlee, in the imposing robes of his office, was standing.

Marriage Words Are Spoken.

It was one of the most auspicious moments in the history of the White House. The guests seemed scarcely to breathe, so intent were they to catch every syllable of the beautiful service. In low, yet resonant tones, Bishop Satterlee began. At the conclusion of the responses from the bride and groom the venerable bishop inquired in a tone that filled the great room:

"Who giveth this woman to be married to this man?"

The president of the United States ascended the platform, and, taking his daughter's right hand, placed it in that of the bridegroom. Thus he gave the bride away to the man of her choice, and by the ring, which an instant later the groom placed on the fourth finger of her left hand, she became Mrs. Nicholas Longworth.

At the conclusion of the wedding ceremony the assembled guests were received by Mr. and Mrs. Longworth on the platform and beneath the floral bower where their hands and hearts were joined forever. They were showered with congratulations. The guests then were received in the blue room by the president and Mrs. Roosevelt. After the informal receptions the bridal breakfast was served in buffet form in the state and private dining-rooms.

Some people are easily caught doing crooked work. A 10 cent delivery stam has been known to land them.

Duluth News Tribune: Indications multiply that the gubernatorial office will seek the man this year, and the wisest aspirants are concealing their aspirations.

The St.Hilaire creamery paid $50,009 to the farmers in that neighborhood last year. If our Rhoda creamer can take in half that ammount this season the farmers up this way can be said to have a good start on the road of prosperity.

Any one reading the Warroad Plaindealer, of February 8th, would be liable to come to the conclusion that they were supporting F. M. Eddy for governor Thats the stuff gentlemen Show your colors. We always did hate a sneak, that was on one side one week and on the other the next.

We wonder how much longer we are to endure the wonderful popularity write ups that are being handed out to A. D.Stephens, with a boom for governor thrown in gratis When you get ready for the real thing gentelmen you will find out how popular he is, as we have taken a good deal of pains to prepare our side of the case and have only a few more facts to look up and then will be ready for the crack of the first gun.

Our school district have the lumber on the ground for our new school house 22 X 32 and the house will be compleate and ready for our spring term of school. The people have taken hold of the matter and pulled togeather to get this school house compleated, and the children who may start their first school days here may say in the future we were fortunate in having lived in a community where the people had enterprise enough to provide us with a school, in the days of our youth.

Another valuable lesson was given in co operation at the farmers' meeting at St.Hilaire last Friday. The farmers of that neighborhood will organize a $25,000 company and build a big flour mill and elevator, and will benefit as a result. If evry community had the same energetic class of farmers that live near St.Hilaire the Red River Vally would set a pace that would astonish the world.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

There are lots of them kind of farmers right up here on the 11 towns, and just listen to a few things we are doing and we are only yearlings. The state said we could not get money to build our school house, but the farmers winked the other eye. Now just take a drive up here this spring and take a look at our school houses. The county said they would not let us have money to build a bridge across the Clearwater river, but the bridge will be built this spring, just the same. The lumber company bought up all the boats on the river last spring and thought they were the whole "cheese", but look out for the farmers boat this spring,

KING FREDERICK VIII.

The Democratic Prince Who Has Become Ruler of Denmark.

The new monarch of Denmark, King Frederick VIII., is known as a great admirer of the United States, is a close reader of American books and as crown prince often entertained Americans travelling in his country. The late King Christian IX. was much loved by his people and was esteemed throughout Europe. The announcement of his death and of the accession of the Crown Prince Frederick to the throne formed a striking scene. Some 50,000 persons were assembled in front of the palace at Copenhagen when the premier, M. Christensen, appeared on the balcony and thrice shouted the words:

"King Christian IX. is dead! Long live King Frederick VIII.!"

Bells had been tolling and minute guns booming, but with the proclamation of a new ruler hurrahs broke from the assembled thousands, and a royal salute was thundered from the city's forts. The newly proclaimed sovereign appeared on the balcony and made an address.

KING FREDERICK VIII.

The new ruler is a brother of Queen Alexandra of England. One of his sons is the new king of Norway, Haakon VII., and one of his brothers is King George of Greece. The king has eight children, four sons and four daughters, and his wife is very rich in her own right. She has been known as one of the tallest and homeliest princesses in Europe. She is over six feet in height and quite masculine looking, but it is said she makes up in virtues what she lacks in beauty. King Frederick was born in Copenhagen in 1843 and was long known as "the soldier prince." He served as a private soldier and refused to be treated unlike his comrades, wore the same clothes as the men in the ranks, ate at the same table and did the same rough chores. He is still very democratic in his habits and ideas.

FOR GOVERNMENT CONTROL

Senator Dryden and His Proposed Insurance Legislation.

The discussion over the question of regulation of the life insurance business gives interest to the bill of Senator John F. Dryden of New Jersey placing corporations of this character under federal supervision. Senator Dryden is president of the Prudential Insurance Company of America and succeeded the late William J. Sewell in the senate in 1902. His bill is the result of years of study of the subject. Its keynote is publicity. Its provisions resemble in many respects those of the national bank act. It places the life insurance companies under the jurisdiction of the department of commerce and labor, with a comptroller of insurance in charge of them.

Senator Dryden was born near Farmington, Me., in 1839 and holds several degrees from Yale university. He never held public office until he entered the senate. As a young man he experimented in fire insurance, and he once related how one day a man came into his office and said he would like to insure his house.

SENATOR JOHN F. DRYDEN.

"I was all attention," said the senator, "and, after getting a minute description of the building, found that it was in a village in the remote part of the adjoining county. I was unacquainted with local conditions, so I said to him:

"'Now, before writing this policy, tell me, do you have any fire protection in your town?'

"'Well, yes,' he drawled.

"'Fire company, I suppose?'

"'Well, no; not as I've heard of.'

"'What, then?'

"'Well, it rains sometimes.'

"I gave him a low rate," added the senator.

Starboard and Port.

Why do the sailors call the right hand side of the ship "starboard" and the left hand "port?" For the answer it is necessary to go back to the days of the Norsemen and Saxons. In the viking ships the warriors hung the "bords," or shields, on the side of the ship above the places for their oars. The viking himself held the steer oar, which was fastened to the right hand side of the stern. Thus the right hand side of the ship became known as the steer side, and as the bords of the warriors were hung there it was called the "steerbord," or starboard side, while the lower, or lurking side, became the larboard. Bord eventually became corrupted into port.

The Golden Crested Wren.

The golden-crested wren is the smallest not only of British but of all European birds. Its average weight is only about eight grains troy. The length of the feathers is about three and a half inches and the stretch of the wings about five inches, but when the feathers are taken off the length of the body does not exceed one inch.

Blessing the River.

In the little Balkan state of Roumania it has been the custom from time immemorial for towns by the river Danube to keep the Christmas feast by a peculiar ceremony called "blessing the river." This used to be carried out on a scaffolding erected on the frozen river, but owing to an accident, when the ice broke, and hundreds of people were drowned, it is now held upon the bank. The people wear turbans of colored paper and carry long white wands. Some are dressed to represent Biblical characters. The service, conducted by priests, lasts about half an hour, and then the ice is broken and a small wooden cross thrown into the water. Then people rush into the icy river after this emblem, and the person who secures it is supposed to be assured of great good luck for the coming year.

Knut Daly who has been visiting friends and relatives up here left for North Dakota this week.

Belle Lengvold, who has been visiting Emma Vattendahl the past week returned to her home near Lillo on Tuesdays stage.

A large number of the young people's society passed a very pleasen evening at the residence of M. E. Hyland Sunday evening.

Herman Lillo is circulating a subscription list to build a bridge across the Clearwater River at the Rollinson crossing, and is meeting with good success.

A mistake in the make up of the paper last week compels us to republish one colum of last weeks matter, in order to straighten out an interesting story.

Jerry O'Brien has contracted for a half mile ditch to be dug through the small meadow east from his house, which will carry a lot of the surplus water from the south part of sec. 32 into the Red Lake River.

Stephen Singer left for Red Lake Agency Sunday morning on a colecting tour. Singer Bros. have been doing a large business in furnishing supplys up there this winter and the best time to colect, is just after Uncle Sam has made a big payment to the Indians.

Miss Nelson and Miss Vattendahl while out driveing last Wednesday narrowly escaped a searious runaway, caused by the horses taking fright at some passing Indians Miss Vattendahl is quite an expert teamster and is in constant practice, (as she is one of the mail carriers on the rout from Sunbeam to Lillo) and succeeded in getting them under control.

A delegation consisting of H. Arndt, P. Sullivan, A. Eve, Dan Sullivan, A. W. Shosten, P. C. Wold and Peter Hunstad drove down to Plummer last Friday after the first load of lumber for our new school house. The first soft weather started the roads to begin to breake, which made it difficult to get through with the heavy loads on saturday; but we managed to land the loads safely in the school district on Saturday evening. We met them at Plummer on our return from Crookston Friday evening and came home with them Saturday.

A. W. Layman, special representative of the general land office with head quaters in Crookston, is about the busiest man in town. he is on the go all the time and this morning left for Bagley and will later pay the land office at Cass Lake a visit. He makes it his business to keep tab on all homesteaders, and those who prove up come pretty near complying strictly with the law. —Crookston Times.

Growing Water Lilies From Seed.

Many of the choicest water lilies, even the magnificent Victoria regia, may be grown from seed. For many years, the seed of this lily, when brought to this country, failed to germinate.

It was finally found that by bottling the seeds in the water of the river in which they grew they could be transported safely from the waters of the Amazon to the far west. Here the lily is usually grown with bottom heat, as it is very tender. Seeds started in pots in a temperature of 90 degrees will germinate in about two weeks and may be planted out in the open air when the nights have become warm—usually about the 1st of June—and will bloom the same summer, but cannot be carried through the winter, but must be started afresh each season, either by the purchase of plants or the sowing of seed, the latter being, of course, much more economical, as seeds may be purchased for a few nickels apiece, the plants costing as many dollars.—American Homes and Gardens.

Use For Old Shoes.

Janitors collect the shoes cast away by tenants and send them to auction rooms, where they are sorted into piles marked "Men," "Women," "Children." Several poor people made fair bids, but the auctioneer did not seem anxious to sell. Finally a man pushed his way through the crowd and offered 10 cents apiece for the whole lot. His bid was successful.

"I was killing time with talk waiting for that fellow," said the auctioneer afterward. "He always pays high for these shoes, and he does not want them for wearing, either. He wants to beat them out for the leather in them. He gets what material there is, puts it through a process and makes stamped imitation leather novelties, such as picture frames, bags, pocketbooks, penknife holders and even chair backs and seats. He finds a ready sale for these novelties and gets a good price for them."—Shoe Retailer.

Cut Up The Body

The Remarkable Case of an Italian Who Killed His Own Wife.

He Told on the Stand Without a Tremor of Dismembering the Corpse of His Spouse.

Legal circles in Europe, says the Green Bag, have been recently stirred up over a case of uxoricide in Italy, which presented unusual features both as regards the act and actor as well as the verdict of the jury, a verdict which satisfied no one except the accused. The crime committed by Alberto Olivo belongs to the kind conveniently classed under the doings of Jack the Ripper. He killed his wife by stabbing her, and, having carefully cut up the body, threw the larger members into the sea. How this was done was graphically described with scientific precision by the accused, who took the stand in his own behalf. In fact, he seemed to wish to aid justice even to the extent of setting the experts right.

"I HAD TO SHARPEN THE KNIFE I USED IN KILLING HER."

"I used the same knife in dismembering her body," he testified, "that I used in killing her, but I had to have it sharpened twice, as the blade became dull in striking the bone."

The exact manner of death was uncertain, the accused himself despite his frankness not being clear on the point. When asked to explain the statement that after striking his wife, who was in bed, with a knife he fell down he replied that he meant that he fainted or lost consciousness—in the sense used by the poet Dante. And he cited two passages from the "Divine Comedy" to make his meaning clear.

He awoke from such faint or stupor in about an hour, when he saw that his wife had three knife wounds in the head. The medical experts, however, had ascertained that there had been a hemorrhage from a wound on the nose. Confronted with this testimony, the accused answered naively: "The experts state it was produced by a wound on the nose. It is and has been my opinion that such nasal wound was superficial. The experts declared it deep. All right. My wife ever since she was a servant at Vercelli was subject to frequent nose bleeding and also to heart trouble. I think these two combined to cause the hemorrhage in question. True it is that I found a little puddle of blood in the middle of the bed. The blood had not spread. However, the hemorrhage was not as heavy as the experts would make it. Suffice it that I cleaned up the blood without trouble. At most it must have been about a quart."

Again, the experts having testified that three ribs had been found broken and that such fractures must have antedated death, the accused gave his own views thereon.

"I do not believe that," he testified. "But it would be impossible for me to ascertain whether those ribs broken by me after my wife's death are those exactly which the experts claim were broken before her death."

Pressed by the question, "Do you or don't you know about this?" he set the audience laughing by this reply, "If the experts don't know it for certain, is it not natural I shouldn't be positive either?"

He must have taken a certain pride in his work of dismemberment, for he hotly denied that it took him twelve hours to cut up the body. "Two and a half hours at the very most," he said. "Twelve hours would have been necessary for a large woman twice the size of my wife."

Motive, if motive it could be called for the crime, was that his wife was a fearful nag. He was a man of some schooling and a certain intelligence while she was a rather common person a domestic by trade.

"When you married her," he was asked, "you knew that your wife was an ignorant woman, did you not?" His attorney objected to this line of examination, whereupon the accused spoke up loudly: "Keep quiet, counselor. I am perfectly able to answer. Yes, sir; my wife was ignorant, and my purpose in marrying her was exactly to redeem her from her doubly low condition, intellectual and moral."

"You are a man of some education; you have written poetry," he was asked. "Did not this intellectual difference between you and your wife lead to conjugal troubles?"

"Not at all," he answered promptly. "You don't suppose that in order to be happy I should have married a poetess or a literary woman?"

"But conversation with her was impossible," he was pressed.

"Do you imagine I wished to enter into philosophical disquisitions with my wife!" he replied, to the enjoyment of the audience.

Asked by the presiding judge, "Were you not cross and stingy with your wife?" he answered: "I wager that with such a woman even your honor would have been cross. As to my being stingy, when that even we are discussing happened I had not one penny saved."

Asked whether his wife was jealous of him, he smiled and replied, "I am very glad you have asked me that question, because my wife was the daughter of a very jealous mother."

An objection was raised on the ground that the question of hereditary jealousy was not an issue.

"Pardon me," said the accused in answer thereto, "but if it is true that genius and madness are inheritable, why not jealousy? My idea is that my wife was afflicted by a sort of mixed jealousy, partly hypothetical, partly hereditary and partly fictitious."

These few extracts from the testimony of the accused would seem to suffice to prove both that the accused was a proper person for an asylum for the criminal insane and that the jury in setting him free by their verdict were false to their oath.

The court framed the following questions for the jury:

First.—Is the jury satisfied that the accused, Alberto Olivo, did during the night of May 16 cause the death of his wife, Ernestina, by stabbing her with a knife or other weapon?

Second.—Is the jury satisfied that the act described in question 1 was committed by the accused while in such a defective mental state as prevented his consciousness and freedom of his acts?

Third.—Did the accused commit the act described in question 1 with the intent to kill?

Fourth.—Was it premeditated?

Fifth.—Was it the result of sudden anger or profound sorrow, caused by unjustifiable provocation?

Sixth.—If there was provocation, was such provocation grave?

Seventh.—Did the accused commit the act described in question 1 while in such a defective mental state that, though it did not free him from responsibility, yet it greatly reduced such responsibility?

To these seven questions regarding the charge of murder the court added four relative to the charge of disposing of the body as follows:

"I CLEANED UP THE BLOOD WITHOUT TROUBLE."

Eighth.—Is the jury satisfied that the accused disposed of the body of his wife by throwing part of it in a cesspool and part into the sea?

Ninth.—Were the acts described in question 8 committed during such a mental state as to free him from responsibility for such acts?

Tenth.—Or was his mental state such as to greatly diminish such responsibility?

Eleventh.—Is the accused guilty of the acts admitted by an affirmative answer to both or either of the questions in No. 8?

To this somewhat disconcerting set of questions the jury brought the following verdict: They replied affirmatively to questions 1, 8, 10 and 11, negatively to the second, third and eleventh and left the others unanswered. In other words, they found that Olivo had killed his wife without the intent so to do. They admitted his disposal of the body, but found it was done in a partially defective state of mind.

Hence the verdict found the accused innocent of criminal intent to kill while recognizing the objective fact of the killing by him; hence he was acquitted of the charge of murder.

Laugh and Live Long.

It has been aptly said that there is not the remotest corner of the inlet of the minute blood vessels of the human body that does not feel some wavelet from the convulsions occasioned by good hearty laughter. The life principle of the central man is shaken to its innermost depths, sending new tides of life and strength to the surface, thus materially tending to insure good health to the persons who indulge therein. The blood moves more rapidly and conveys a different impression to all the organs of the body as it visits them on that particular mystic journey when the man is laughing from that conveyed at other times. For this reason every good, hearty laugh in which a person indulges tends to lengthen his life, conveying as it does new and distinct stimulus to the vital forces.

TERRIBLE SCALY ECZEMA.

Eruptions Appeared on Chest, and Face and Neck Were All Broken Out—Cured by Cuticura.

"I had an eruption appear on my chest and body and extend upwards and downwards, so that my neck and face were all broken out; also my arms and the lower limbs as far as the knees. I at first thought it was prickly heat. But soon scales or crusts formed where the breaking out was. Instead of going to a physician, I purchased a complete treatment of the Cuticura Remedies, in which I had great faith, and all was satisfactory. A year or two later the eruption appeared again, only a little lower; but before it had time to spread I procured another supply of the Cuticura Remedies, and continued their use until the cure was complete. It is now five years since the last attack, and have not seen any signs of a return. I have more faith in Cuticura Remedies for skin diseases than anything I know of. Emma E. Wilson, Liscomb, Iowa, Oct. 1, 1905."

TWITCHING NERVES

A Serious Hereditary Trouble Cured By Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Sufferers from ailments that have afflicted in regular succession one generation after another of their family are, as a rule, inclined to submit to them as inevitable. The case which follows proves that such hereditary difficulties are not beyond the reach of curative forces and should inspire hopefulness and a readiness to try remedies that have effected signal cures, such as that which is here given.

Mrs. Elizabeth Rannells, of No. 408 East Seventh street, Newton, Kansas, gives the following account of her ailment and her cure:

"For two years I suffered from a trying nervousness in my lower limbs from my knees down, as my mother and my grandmother had suffered before me. The situation was for many years accepted as unavoidable because hereditary. But about two years ago, when my son was realizing benefit from the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, I thought there might possibly be some good in them for me. My trouble had then become so serious as to make it difficult for me to sleep. I often had to walk the floor in restlessness the whole night. After taking some six boxes the twitching disappeared and I ceased to use the remedy. I evidently stopped a little too soon for nervousness came back after a month or so and I used the pills again for a short time. Relief came at once and since I stopped using them the second time I have been free from any return of the twitchings or from any interference with my sleep."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured the worst cases of bloodlessness, indigestion, influenza, headaches, lumbago, sciatica, neuralgia, nervousness, spinal weakness and the special ailments of girls and women. For further information, address the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Tangle Over Pauper.

Winona.—The question of whether a town may be compelled to pay for physician's services rendered to a pauper who was not in destitute circumstances prior to the injury which rendered these services necessary is to be appealed to the supreme court. Dr. Robbins of this city brought action against the town of Homer for services in attending Richard Lessard, an alleged pauper, who had fractured his arm. The case went to the supreme court on a demurrer and was sent back for a new trial, the supreme court holding that the doctor was entitled to recover. At the last trial in the district court the jury returned a verdict in the sum $185 for the plaintiff, but dismissed the action on its merits and charged the costs to the plaintiff. The appeal is now being made to secure a final decision.

Close Call.

Minneapolis.—Mrs. Ole Johnson, 2413 Hiawatha avenue, had a narrow escape from being burned to death in her bed in a fire which completely destroyed the bed and caused considerable damage to the room. As there was no means of heating the room, Mrs. Johnson determined to make her bed comfortable before retiring. She placed hot flat-irons on the mattress. The irons were extremely hot and set fire to the mattress soon after Mrs. Johnson had gone to bed. The frightened woman ran out of the room, crying fire, and an alarm was sent in by one of the neighbors. The firemen succeeded in confining the blaze to the one room. The bed was completely destroyed and the other furnishings in the room damaged to the extent of about $100.

Better Training.

St. Paul.—More industrial training in the state is recommended by George E. Alton, state high school inspector, in his annual report. He calls attention to the overcrowding of the professions and the need of "making work fashionable." Changing industrial conditions, he declares, make manual training necessary. He says: "I feel we are doing next to nothing to direct the attention of our students to home life and productive industry. Languages, history, science and mathematics are wholesome subjects of instruction. They should not be neglected, belittled or crowded aside. The elements of these subjects are the basis of scholarship, the only safe foundation on which one may rise above prejudices to the realm of accurate thinking."

A Church Crisis.

St. Paul.—A crisis in the fractional war at St. James' African M. E. church was reached when, following a sermon on "Brotherly Love," preached by the pastor, Rev. R. Seymour, there was a pitched battle over the collection. The Rondo street police were called and a squad of policemen was hurried to the church. The fight was over when they arrived and no arrests were made. The services were the first held since the opposition elected trustees over the head of the pastor. The church was filled, both factions being well represented. There was trouble in the air, although nothing happened until the collection was taken.

Escaped.

Crookston. According to word received here, Eck Hathaway of this city, who was recently arrested on a charge of being concerned in a systematic robbery of Soo freight cars at Thief River Falls, has escaped from the Red Lake county jail. Another prisoner, whose name is not given, also escaped. The men had manufactured a saw out of a piece of steel taken from their shoes, and with this had severed the bars of their cells. Sheriff Linnihan and a posse were reported to be in hot pursuit, but at last report had not recaptured the prisoners.

Shipping Trout.

Duluth.—Supt. S. P. Wires of the United States fish hatchery in Duluth has shipped 100,000 Lake Superior trout eggs to the Argentine republic, where they will be hatched and then planted in the water of the lakes and streams in the foothills of the Andes. This is the second shipment and the sending of Lake Superior trout fry to that country has been demonstrated as successful. The consignment sent to Argentina a year ago has flourished. The loss as reported by T. A. Tulin, national fish culturist of Argentina, was only 4 per cent.

The News Condensed.

Prior Lake—Wesley, the 11-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hack, was almost instantly killed by a colt. The boy was leading the animal to water with the halter rope tied about his waist when he slipped and fell, scaring the colt, which ran forty rods dragging the boy. When stopped the boy was dead. His skull was fractured. His remains were taken to Jefferson, Wis., for burial.

Moorhead—At a meeting of the school board of the city C. W. Martindale was unanimously re-elected superintendent for the next school year at a salary of $1,700, a raise of $100 over this year.

Elk River—The figures compiled by Clerk of Court Davee show that the trials of Palmer and Crawford, the so-called "box car bandits," cost Sherburne county $6,100.

Moorhead—Maj. Anderson, thirty-five years old, is in jail here, having been brought from Ulen, where he is charged with having made a murderous assault upon his mother.

Crookston—Word has been received here that the department of agriculture of the United States is to construct one mile of model road in Minnesota and North Dakota some time during the coming summer.

HIGH CLASS DRUGGISTS

AND — OTHERS.

The better class of druggists, everywhere, are men of scientific attainments and high integrity, who devote their lives to the welfare of their fellow men in supplying the best of remedies and purest medicinal agents of known value, in accordance with physicians' prescriptions and scientific formula. Druggists of the better class manufacture many excellent remedies, but always under original or officinal names and they never sell false brands, or imitation medicines. They are the men to deal with when in need of anything in their line, which usually includes all standard remedies and corresponding adjuncts of a first-class pharmacy and the finest and best of toilet articles and preparations and many useful accessories and remedial appliances. The earning of a fair living, with the satisfaction which arises from a knowledge of the benefits conferred upon their patrons and assistance to the medical profession, is usually their greatest reward for long years of study and many hours of daily toil. They all know that Syrup of Figs is an excellent laxative remedy and that it gives universal satisfaction, and therefore they are selling many millions of bottles annually to the well informed purchasers of the choicest remedies, and they always take pleasure in handing out the genuine article bearing the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package. They know that in cases of colds and headaches attended by biliousness and constipation and of weakness or torpidity of the liver and bowels, arising from irregular habits, indigestion, or over-eating, that there is no other remedy so pleasant, prompt and beneficial in its effects as Syrup of Figs, and they are glad to sell it because it gives universal satisfaction.

Owing to the excellence of Syrup of Figs, the universal satisfaction which it gives and the immense demand for it, imitations have been made, tried and condemned, but there are individual druggists to be found, here and there, who do not maintain the dignity and principles of the profession and whose greed gets the better of their judgment, and who do not hesitate to recommend and try to sell the imitations in order to make a larger profit. Such preparations sometimes have the name—"Syrup of Figs"—or "Fig Syrup" and of some piratical concern, or fictitious fig syrup company, printed on the package, but they never have the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of the package. The imitations should be rejected because they are injurious to the system. In order to sell the imitations they find it necessary to resort to misrepresentation or deception, and whenever a dealer passes off on a customer a preparation under the name of "Syrup of Figs" or "Fig Syrup," which does not bear the full name of the California Fig Syrup Co. printed on the front of the package, he is attempting to deceive and mislead the patron who has been so unfortunate as to enter his establishment, whether it be large or small, for if the dealer resorts to misrepresentation and and deception in one case he will do so with other medicinal agents, and in the filling of physicians' prescriptions, and should be avoided by every one who values health and happiness. Knowing that the great majority of druggists are reliable, we supply the immense demand for our excellent remedy entirely through the druggists, of whom it may be purchased everywhere, in original packages only, at the regular price of fifty cents per bottle, but as exceptions exist it is necessary to inform the public of the facts, in order that all may decline or return any imitation which may be sold to them. If it does not bear the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package, do not hesitate to return the article and to demand the return of your money, and in future go to one of the better class of druggists who will sell you what you wish and the best of everything in his line at reasonable prices.

SMOOTHING HIM DOWN.

The Wrathy Statesman's Way of Getting Even with an Accuser.

"The infamous scoundrel!" exclaimed the eminent statesman. "I'll sue him for criminal libel! I want you to begin proceedings against him right now."

"What has he been doing?" asked the lawyer, according to the Chicago Tribune.

"He called me a corrupt politician and a notorious grafter."

"But look here—"

"O, I can prove it, all right! He said it in the presence of a dozen witnesses."

"Did he mention any particular instance of corruption or grafting?"

"No."

"Then, my dear senator, I'm afraid we can't make a case against him. You see—"

"But, good heavens! Haven't I told you—"

"Yes, but in order to make a case that will stick, we must have the evidence that he alleged some specific act of grafting or corruption."

"Why is that?"

"Because then we can make him prove it. If he doesn't prove it we've got the dead wood on him. But he makes the charge in general terms, don't you see, and if we sue him he might plead justification and manage somehow to throw the burden of proof on us, and in the present excited and prejudiced state of the public mind, senator, we might have some difficulty in doing that; while, on the other hand, he might—"

The rest was spoken in a whisper.

"I see," said the eminent statesman, his look of wrath giving way to one of stern purpose and high resolve. "There's another way I can get at the infernal scoundrel. He's got a niece that's a clerk in one of the departments. I'll have her put out of that job if it costs me a million dollars!"

UNDER WHICH KING?

"The More Postum the More Food—The More Coffee the More Poison."

The Pres. of the W. C. T. U. in a young giant state in the Northwest says:

"I did not realize that I was a slave to coffee till I left off drinking it. For three or four years I was obliged to take a nerve tonic every day. Now I am free, thanks to Postum Food Coffee.

"After finding out what coffee will do to its victims, I could hardly stand to have my husband drink it; but he was not willing to quit. I studied for months to find a way to induce him to leave it off. Finally I told him I would make no more coffee.

"I got Postum Food Coffee, and made it strong—boiled it the required time, and had him read the little book, 'The Road to Wellville,' that comes in every pkg.

"To-day Postum has no stronger advocate than my husband! He tells our friends how to make it, and that he got through the winter without a spell of the grip and has not had a headache for months—he used to be subject to frequent nervous headaches.

"The stronger you drink Postum the more food you get; the stronger you drink coffee the more poison you get." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

HENDERSON IS DEAD.

The ex-Speaker of Congress Dies at his Home in Dubuque after Long Illness.

Dubuque, Io.—David B. Henderson former speaker of the national house of representatives died at 2 p. m. Feb. 25 of paresis which attacked nine months ago. He began sinking Friday afternoon, rallied Saturday morning but in the afternoon lapsed into unconsciousness and failed rapidly until the end came.

All of family, except a son who is in California, were at his bedside. Col. Henderson has been unable to recognize anyone but his wife since a week ago, except on Friday when he partially regained his mental faculties.

Col. Henderson was stricken with paresis last May, and his condition grew so grave that he was removed to a hospital in September. His condition remained unchanged except for the usual progress of such disease till a week ago last Friday, when he suffered another stroke, which resulted in total blindness. The former speaker failed rapidly physically and mentally until Friday, when his mental powers returned for a few hours, followed by a relapse, which ended in death.

Washington, D. C.—The Former Speaker David B. Henderson was for many years a prominent figure in the councils of his party and had a host of friends among both Republicans and Democrats in congress. Succeeding Speaker Reed in the chair, Mr. Henderson carried out vigorously the rules and adopted his predecessor for the expedition of the business of the house. He was twice elected speaker, his last term in that office closing a twenty-year service in the lower branch of congress.

Blinded by His Folly.

Rochester, Minn.—Entirely because of his own foolhardiness H. C. Lawrence of Pine Island, a section hand on the Chicago Great Western, is totally blind, having lost the sight of his only good eye. Lawrence had a railroad torpedo in his pocket, and after the section gang had finished work and were starting for home he attached the torpedo to the track and ran the handcar over it. The car was not heavy enough, and in spite of the warnings of his companions Lawrence took a heavy spike hammer and struck the torpedo. It exploded with terrific force and a fragment of the metal case struck Lawrence in the face, tearing a gash across his forhead and destroying the sight of an eye. As Lawrence had previously lost the sight of the other eye he is now totally blind.

Receipts Turn Out Notes

Ortonville, Minn.—Through a suit brought here it has been revealed that a number of farmers in this vicinity, both on the Minnesota and Dakota side, have been victimized by a smooth swindler who made a trip through here last September.

The man called upon a number of farmers, representing that he had a sure cure for lumpy jaw in cattle. He would leave a sample package of the remedy with the farmer, taking the latter's receipt and making the farmer the agent for the patent medicine. A few weeks later the farmer would receive a consignment of goods of various kinds, and still later a bill for the same.

Fire Panic.

Alton, Ill.—Four hundred children who were being entertained with a moving picture show in St. Mary's school at Alton were thrown into a wild panic by the accidental ignition of a roll of celluloid films, about 800 feet in length, from a spark dropped from the calcium light of the machine, which filled the hall with suffocating smoke.

Minnesota Scores.

Chicago, Ill.—Minnesota has swept the boards at the convention of the National Creamery Buttermakers' association. The delegation returned in high glee. They captured the following trophies:

Banner for the highest average score, twenty-two states competing.

Gold medal for highest individual score.

Silver medal for second highest score.

The Minnesota combined score was 176, and Wisconsin second with 147.

Insane.

Williston, N. D.,—Horace. C Howard, a Great Northern express messenger, who arrived home at Grand Forks from Texas a week ago with a bride, is violently insane and is locked up in the county jail. Howard was married at Brownwood, Tex., Feb. 10, to Miss Ethel B Beavers, and she is at Grand Forks, almost prostrated over the news of her young husband's insanity.

Putting in Wheat.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—Men returning from the western portion of Minnehaha and the eastern portion of McCook county report that some wheat seeding has aalready been done by farmers in that section.

WASHINGTON LETTER

THE RISE OF REPRESENTATIVE CAMPBELL OF KANSAS.

THE TAFT PARTY REUNIONS

Senator Knox of Pennsylvania No Shirker—Averages Over One Hundred Letters a Day—Graceful Action by Opposition Member.

WASHINGTON.—Representative Philip Pitt Campbell, of Kansas, is very much in the limelight these days and is pointed out to the visitors at the capitol as the congressional "Octopus Hunter." He has a lance always in rest for a tilt with the Standard Oil company. A year ago he offered a resolution in the house to investigate the production and price of petroleum, which was directly aimed at the Standard Oil company and its operations in the state of Kansas. Recently in his speech on the railway rate bill Mr. Campbell took occasion to further attack this corporation and introduced an amendment to the bill which would prevent railroads from carrying the Standard Oil company's tank cars.

The record of this Kansas congressman is one that was more common 50 years ago, when frontiersmen rose by their own exertions from humble surroundings to a high place in statesmanship, than in the present day. At the age of ten years, owing to the death of his father, he was compelled to help support his mother and six brothers and sisters. He piloted a yoke of oxen that broke up most of the land on their prairie farm in Kansas and for several years he was a hired man among the neighboring farmers in order that his wages might help out his mother and family. Under the most adverse circumstances he secured a college education, read law and built up a practice. He is a little over 40 years of age and is now talked of for United States senator, a position he scarcely dreamed of when driving his oxen across the Kansas prairies 30 years ago.

Gay Doings.

IT must have been a jolly party that accompanied Secretary Taft to the Philippines and the orient last summer, if the reunions held by it this winter are anything like the good times experienced on the trip. The marriage of Miss Roosevelt and Representative Longworth, members of this celebrated party, has brought the latter into prominence, and for several weeks past there has been a succession of dinners, receptions and other functions held by this company of ladies and gentlemen who traveled some 20,000 or more miles together.

The party is known in social circles as the "Tafters." This is in honor of the jolly secretary of war who originated the idea of the trip and who had charge of the ladies and gentlemen in a sort of personally conducted tour across the Pacific through the Philippine archipelago and in Japan. At the gatherings this winter Mr. Taft has always been the chairman or toastmaster, and seldom have more enjoyable informal affairs been given than those of this party, all of whom got so well acquainted with each other and have so many jokes and personal experiences to relate at their reunions.

Naturally the two young people whose engagement occurred on this trip have had to stand a great deal of chaffing from the other members of the party, but they both have accepted it gracefully and as they are quick-witted and good-natured, they have by no means had the worst of the repartee and encounters at the dining tables and in the reception parlors.

Hard-Worked Senator.

IF I had known there was so much work and annoyance connected with the position of United States senator I think I would have hesitated accepting the place," was the remark recently made by Senator Knox, of Pennsylvania. "I have worked harder since taking a seat in the senate than I ever did in my life. The senator who does his duty conscientiously is one of the hardest worked men in public life."

Mr. Knox does not know whether he wants to continue as a United States senator or not. There is no question about his doing a full day's work every day the senate is in session. With the possible exception of Mr. Pettus, of Alabama, Mr. Knox is the earliest riser in official Washington. He gets up before six o'clock every morning, and after a light breakfast sits down, no later than seven o'clock, to his work. He goes through his mail hastily, selecting a letter here and there that looks as though it were from some one in whom he was particularly interested, and after reading this part of his correspondence he gets down to the work of studying legislation and other matters that his senatorial duties impose upon him. About nine o'clock his secretary and stenographer put in their appearance, and then the senator dictates his correspondence, which averages over 100 letters a day.

His time is fully occupied with his correspondence and an occasional call at the White House until the senate meets, where he is very prompt and conscientious in attendance.

For Increase of Salaries.

REPRESENTATIVE SULZER, of New York, is a Democrat and a Tammany man, but he has broad ideas of statesmanship that have brought to his support many of the best leaders of the opposition in the house. He is now urging the passage of a bill which he introduced, providing for larger salaries for the president, vice president and members of the cabinet. It is considered a very graceful thing for a member of the party opposed to the present administration to take this initiative, as it puts the question on an absolutely non-partisan basis. Mr. Sulzer is meeting with very strong support from newspapers from all over the country, and he is earnestly endeavoring to have congress take action on his bill.

In this bill Mr. Sulzer provides for a salary of $100,000 a year to the president, $50,000 to the vice president, and $25,000 a year to cabinet officers. There can be no objection to these salaries from anyone who knows the great personal expense these officers are all under in maintaining their positions in Washington. Mr. Roosevelt is not lavish in his entertainments, but his democratic method of official living eats up every cent the government pays him, and it is said that his very modest private fortune has been seriously trenched upon since he became president. A cabinet officer cannot possibly make a decent showing on his salary of $8,000 a year, and many a poor man of the highest ability and capacity has been compelled to leave the cabinet, where his services were of the highest value, because his meager salary would not permit him to maintain his position with the dignity that is expected from so high an official.

Another feature of Mr. Sulzer's bill is a pension of $25,000 a year to expresidents. This is meeting with very general favor, as it is considered unjust and unbecoming that a man who has held the high office of president should be compelled to afterwards earn his living in some of the professions.

The Lieutenant Generalship.

WITHIN the next year there will have passed into retirement the last lieutenant general of the army who served his apprenticeship in the civil war. After that the position will be held by men who have come up in the army since that great struggle. Lieut. Gen. Chaffee has just retired, and has been succeeded as lieutenant general by Maj. Gen. John C. Bates. The latter will be succeeded in a few months by Maj. Gen. Henry C. Corbin, and he will retire and be succeeded by Maj. Gen. Arthur MacArthur, all within the next 12 months. The lieutenant generalship will then go to a member of the younger generation.

When Gen. Chaffee retired one of the best soldiers ever in the American army went out of service. He was born with the instinct of a soldier and worked himself up from the lowest rank to the highest. At the outbreak of the war he enlisted from Ohio in the Sixth cavalry of the regular army. He said that he wanted to have real fighting and to be a real soldier and thought he could accomplish his desire better in the regular than in the volunteer service. He served in this command as a private and as a noncommissioned officer and was then made a second lieutenant, reaching the grade of first lieutenant in 1865. He was an ideal trooper and in love with the cavalry service. During the civil war he was in 50 pitched engagements.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price - $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Give Duluth the republican state convention, so the disappointed politicans can jump in the lake and cool off.

The Jacobson and Lord scrap for the nomination for governor will stir up the old Collins, Dunn, row stronger than it was two years ago, and while the cats are fighting the monkey, or donkey will run away with the cheese.

The Big Fork Compass in discussing, the newspaper man, says: "In other words, he gives more on his editorial page than he earns from his advertising pages. He is the greatest philanthropist in town, and usually the one least able to be generous." --Warroad Plaindealer.

If you remember Dunn was one of the most popular auditors in the state, until the other side told their side of the story. We hope we will not have to listen to Jacobsons drainage record while a member of the state legislature, in the eloquent manner that the Johnson supporters can tell it.

Since the marriage of Alice Roosevelt and Congressman Longworth, bald heads have becmae so fashionable that it is liable to drive the makers of hair restoratives out of business. The man that can invent a preperation that will remove the hair and make the head shine like a billiard ball is the coming millioner,

The township elections will be held this year on Tuesday March the 13th, and it is your duty to go to election that day and vote. The Eleven township's people shoul be sure to attend to this importent matter, as we are liveing in a country which one of the editosr of Thief River Falls swars is only partialy settled and the larger portion of what few there is only live on their claims a portion of the year and move into the cities and village during the winter. Turn out to election and answer this with your vote, and give the people to undestand that you are liveing here and are a voter here.

SOME MORE RUMORS.

The most recent and prominent political rumor in Clay County is to the affect that W.B.Douglas of Moorhead will be a candidate for the nomination for congress in opposition to Halvor Steenerson. State Senator Stephens is also spoken of as a possiable candidate, which would make the contest a three—cornered one, and would be an interesting battle, says The Felton Tribune.

Yes it seems to us that we have heard about this rumor before, and it reminds us of a farmer down east, that had a vicious little bull who by hard fighting had becam eboss of the barnyard; until one day the farmer put his stock in a new pasture beside the railroad track. When the little bull see the train coming he jumped the fence and with a roar that could be heard for a mile planted himself sqarely on the track in front of the locomotive. The farmer, who had grown somewhat tired of his vicious ways, shouted from a safe distance. "Go it you little cuss. I admire your spunk but dispise your judgement."

BOAT MEETING'S.

There will be meeting at the store of Oluf Hanson on section 1 in Deer Park township on Monday March the 5th; at 2 o'clock P.M. for the purpose of taking up the question of forming a company of farmers to build a boat to carry freight on The Red Lake River, The second meeting will be held at the store of Andrew Ellingson, at High Landing on March the 6th, at 2 o'clock P. M. The third meeting will be held at Jensens hall at Kratka on March the 7th, at 2 o'clock P. M. The general meeting, for the purpose of organiseing the company will be held at Jensens hall at Kratka on March the 10th, at 10 o' clock A.M. All the farmers liveing tributary to the river can and should take an active interest in this movement, for if we can get this boat built it will do for our railroad until we get one built overland throu this part of the country.

If the republican party should be unwise enough to nominate Jacobson as the candidate of the party for our next governor, he will not pole as many votes in the northern part of the state next November as Dunn did two years ago.

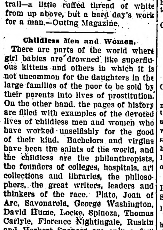
Breaking the Trail.

Winter in the mountains is severe in its restrictions. Sledging and travel over the snow banked trails are limited to bare necessity. In the colder seasons the trails are kept open by shoveling and packing them down. When the runners sing intermittently in high, thin voices, the teamster, with a belt tight around his overcoat and flopping his arms to keep warm, faces his greatest hardships, but when the heavy snows and rapid thaws of spring come teaming means a battle and a venture with a sudden termination hanging just above. Thousands of tons of snow up the mountain sides hang on a trigger that can be sprung by the sigh of a breeze or the rolling of a pine cone, and in summer many a barren slope and pile of rock and timber at the bottom tells a skeleton tale of the winter's night. Floundering, swearing and persevering open the trail—a little ruffed thread of white from up above, but a hard day's work for a man.—Outing Magazine.

Childless Men and Women.

There are parts of the world where girl babies are drowned like superfluous kittens and others in which it is not uncommon for the daughters in the large families of the poor to be sold by their parents into lives of prostitution. On the other hand, the pages of history are filled with examples of the devoted lives of childless men and women who have worked unselfishly for the good of their kind. Bachelors and virgins have been the saints of the world, and the childless are the philanthropists, the founders of colleges, hospitals, art collections and libraries, the philosophers, the great writers, leaders and thinkers of the race. Plato, Joan of Arc, Savonarola, George Washington, David Hume, Locke, Spinoza, Thomas Carlyle, Florence Nightingale, Ruskin and Herbert Spencer are only a few of the great names in this class. An interesting volume could be written on the indebtedness of the world to childless men and women.—New York Medical Journal.

Had Him There.



"Oh, very well," says the browbeaten husband; "you may say what you like, but I would have you know that there have been many other women who said I was the light of their life."

"The light of their life!" sniffs the strenuous wife. "Humph! And I don't doubt that each and every one of them turned you down."—Chicago Tribune.

"Dew Ponds."

Among the most singular archaeological remains found in Great Britain are the ancient "dew ponds," the construction of which is ascribed to people of the Neolithic age. The purpose of these ponds was to furnish drinking water for cattle. An exposed position, where springs were absent, was selected; and a broad, hollowed surface was formed and covered over with straw or some other nonconducting material. Above was spread a thick layer of clay strewn with stones. During the night the cold surface of the clay caused an abundance of moisture to condense from the lower layers of the air. Some of these ancient dew ponds are still in working order.

Stephen Singer is up to Red Lake Agency, on a colecting tour this week.

Walt McAndrees transacted business at St.Hilare and Thief River Falls Monday and Tuesday.

Rev. E.A. Mostue will hold religious services at the residence of Oluf Snowback next Sunday at 11 o'clock A.M.

Miss O'Reiley drove up to her home at Germantown Friday evening for a visit with the homefolks, returning Sunday.

W. A.Swanson, John Polbrook and Theadore Hyland drove to Thief River Falls yesterday after lumber for the Rhoda school house.

Thomas Jacobson and August J. Wentzel drove down to Plummer on Wednesday after two loads of lumber for our new school house.

Dan Sulliyan drove down to Thief River Falls Tuesday to attend the special term of court of Judg Bishop to take out his full citizen papers.

P. Sullivan, Henry Arndt and Wallace Grace drove down to the town of Garnes after three loads of oats on Monday, which are selling at 32 cents down there.

We have bet George Singer, of Deer Park Township, a box of good cigars that the Town of High Landing will pole more votes at the spring election than the town of Deer Park.

A social party was given at the residence of Andrew Ellingson on Saturday evening, which was attended by about 30 couple and a very pleasant time was had by all who attended.

A. Eve, Dan and P. Sullivan went up to Pea Soup Island yesterday after three loads of lumber. And still the lumber continues to come, and the claim "shanties" to be built, Mr. Estman.

The Rhoda Creamery Association will hold a meeting at the store Singer Bros. March 6th, at 1 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of organizeing the association. All share holders are requested to be preasent.

Joseph Duchamp drove down from his Germantown farm on Friday to attend the creamery meeting, at Sjur Stolaas place on Saturday Mr.Duchamp is a practical farmer who takes an active interest in the upbuilding of this part of Red Lake county.

We received a letter from a new subscriber in Chicago, the other day asking us if there was a store at High Landing. We said yes and one at Kratka, and we was of the opinion they was doing all the business they cared to, as they were not advertiseing to get more,

While we do not want to oppose any masure that is for the upbuilding of this part of the country, we can not see what a farmer liveing in this Township can expect to gain by taking a share in the Thief River Falls creamery How are you going to get your cream from High Lading to Thief River Falls? Do you expect to carry it or ship it on the lightning express boat "Dan Patch?" Keep your name off from them notes, and do not go into a deal to help Thief River Falls to build a creamery, but keep your money and notes at home and use it to build a creamery in your part of the country,

Read the notice of boat meeting in an other colum.

There is always important business to be attended to in a new town and if you want any thing to say about it you should go to election March 13th.

Charles Swanson, of Deer Park township passed by this way yesterday on his way to Thief River Falls after lumber for the Rhoda school house.

If you should see a farmer stuck in a slough between here and Thief River Falls next summer, with a can of cream in his wagon, you can make up your mind he is a High Landing farmer that has bought stock in the creamery down there.

You can transact any business that you have to do with the County Officials at this office. If you want to get married you do not have to go to Red Lake Falls to get your license as we can get it for you delivered here.

U. S. Commissioner S.H.Drew of McIntosh has a date set for taking final proof for May 14th. Any settler who desires to take proof before him to save the expense of going to Crookston can make their applications at this office, or with Stephen Singer at Rhoda.

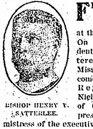
The Wedding of Miss Roosevelt and Nicholas Longworth, M.C.



BISHOP HENRY Y. SATTERLEE.

FEB. 17 will be Cupid's inauguration day at the White House. On that day President Roosevelt's interesting daughter, Miss Alice, will become the wife of Representative Nicholas Longworth of Ohio, and the president and the mistress of the executive mansion have bidden their guests to the much anticipated ceremony in the following form:

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt request the pleasure of your company at the marriage of their daughter Alice Lee
to
Mr. Nicholas Longworth,
On Saturday, February the Seventeenth,
Nineteen Hundred and Six,
at twelve o'clock.
An answer is requested.

All the world has been looking forward for weeks to this auspicious event. No prince and princess of modern Europe or of bygone days of mediaeval pomp and pageantry were ever married under circumstances more picturesque and romantic. The love story of the happy pair has been told a thousand times all around the globe, and in all lands hearts have throbbed as they felt the one touch of nature that makes the whole world kin.

The invitation to the ceremony on Feb. 17 is couched in as simple phraseology as possible. The cards were sent to about a thousand persons, this number being all who could be invited to the White House for the function without uncomfortably crowding it. It is the intention of the president and his charming wife to make the wedding a family affair rather than a ceremony of state, and both parties to the matrimonial contract have numerous relatives. It was originally planned to extend invitations to all members of congress, but this it was found would fill the executive mansion to overflowing. The "official list" was restricted, therefore, to the members of the cabinet, the supreme court and the diplomatic corps. The latter, with the representatives of the army and navy who will be present, will contribute the brilliancy of their gold lace and uniforms toward the impressiveness of the spectacle in the famous east room at the time of the marriage.

COPYRIGHT 1906 BY WALDON FAWCETT

NICHOLAS LONGWORTH.

Although the adjuncts of the ceremony will make it a somewhat elaborate function, the wedding service itself will be a comparatively simple affair. Miss Roosevelt will have no bridesmaids. She had so many friends to choose from that the problem of selecting attendants was a difficult one, and she cut the Gordian knot by deciding to have no bridesmaids at all. She will enter on the arm of her father, and the marriage service will then proceed in accordance with the ritual of the Episcopal church. The officiating clergyman will be the bishop of Washington, the Right Rev. Henry Y. Satterlee, an old friend of the family. He will be assisted by the Rev. Dr. Roland Cotton Smith, rector of St. John's church, where Miss Roosevelt and her mother attend. There will be music by the vested choir of St. John's and also by the famous Marine band. Mr. Longworth will have a best man, and there will be eight ushers.

The wedding dress—the gown in which the bride will march to the altar—is a detail of the nuptials not without interest to several millions of the fair sex. Miss Roosevelt's trousseau includes many beautiful costumes, but the richest of all is that which she will wear when she takes the marital vows. It is not remarkable for its elaborate character, but rather for its tastefulness and simplicity, and in it the bride will appear with a quaint and picturesque setting more becoming to her than a costume of greater pretentiousness. The gown is a shimmering robe of silver and white brocade trimmed with exquisite rose point lace, inherited by the bride elect from her own mother, the president's first wife, who died when Miss Alice was three days old and who before her marriage was Miss Alice Lee. The material of which the gown is fashioned was woven in Newark, N.-J., and on its completion the loom cords were destroyed so that the pattern could not be reproduced. The workman employed upon the shuttle is said to have received a present of $50. The statement is made that if the threads of the gown were elongated they would stretch from New York to San Francisco, and even then enough would be left to encircle Pike's peak.

MISS ALICE ROOSEVELT.

At the wedding breakfast immediately following the ceremony the bride will be surrounded by the young women who have been her special chums and who would have been invited to be bridesmaids but for the danger of making discriminations and wounding somebody's feelings. The presents promise to be very numerous and costly, as the heads of many foreign governments will take this opportunity of expressing esteem and friendship for the American people by gifts to the young woman whose sire happens at this time to occupy the post of chief magistrate.

The presents from the potentates of kingdoms and empires will be costly. But both the bride and bridegroom, who are true blue Americans and of democratic spirit, will appreciate, too, the less expensive tokens of good will from personal friends and also from private citizens whose acquaintance they do not possess. Even the Kansas farmer who sent some turnips which had won a prize at the county fair will not be ignored in the letters of acknowledgment, and the Chinese merchant who presented some especially fine preserved ginger will be thanked, though Mr. Longworth does not wish any more ginger sprinkled into the proceedings. There will be a wedding journey to Europe after congress adjourns, and on their return the couple will live in Washington except between sessions of congress, when their residence will be the old Longworth home in Cincinnati.

It was in February twenty-two years ago that Miss Roosevelt was born. It was in that month that she made her bow to the American public when she christened the Emperor William's yacht Meteor. It is in that month, too, that she will be married, and the event comes pretty near being on the festival day of good old St. Valentine. Mr. Longworth is fourteen years the senior of his future bride. Despite the fact that he had passed the age of extreme susceptibility to romantic sentiment, he was a most ardent wooer, and those wise in such matters predict that he will be a devoted husband. It is believed that the president's daughter turned down titled foreigners in order to accept her untitled American admirer. At a dinner in Philadelphia the prospective bridegroom gallantly said:

THE LONGWORTH SMILE.

"I am a lucky man, and I know it. I realize that I stand here shining in reflected glory, but when the rays come from the sun, then indeed I am glad. And I think," he added, glancing into another apartment where Miss Roosevelt's smiling face could be discerned, "I think I see the sun shining behind the palm trees in the other room."

RHEUMATIC PAINS

Disappear When Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Purify the Blood and Heal Inflamed Tissues.

Rheumatism is a disease of the blood; caused by the failure of the body to cast off certain poisons. External applications are of use only in securing temporary relief from pain—the cure for rheumatism lies in purifying and enriching the blood.

Mrs. Frederick Brown, of 40 Sumpter street, Sandy Hill, N.Y., was a sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism from the time she was sixteen. She says: "It first appeared in my knee joints, then in my hips and waist. It became a regular thing that I would be laid up all winter. The rheumatism affected mostly my hands, hips, feet and shoulders. My hands were all puffed up and my feet became deformed. I lost my appetite, couldn't sleep and sometimes I was compelled to cry out, the pain was so intense.

"For several winters I was under the doctor's care and while his medicine relieved the pain for a little while there seemed no prospect for a permanent cure. I was confined to my bed, off and on, for weeks at a time. My limbs swelled dreadfully at times and I was reduced almost to nothing.

"In the spring of 1904, upon the advice of a friend, I began to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. At that time I wasn't able to do anything and could barely eat enough to keep alive. I felt a change for the better in about a month. I began to eat heartily and I suffered less pain. Of course I kept on the treatment, using care in my diet, and in about three months I was cured. I am entirely well today and do all my own work."

Prominent Minnesota Merchant Cured to Stay Cured by Doan's Kidney Pills.

O. C. Hayden, of O. C. Hayden & Co., dry goods merchants, of Albert Lea, Minn., says: "I was so lame that I could hardly walk. There was an unaccountable weakness of the back, and constant pain and aching. I could find no rest and was very uncomfortable at night. As my health was good in every other way I could not understand this trouble. It was just as if all the strength had gone from my back. After suffering for some time I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. The remedy acted at once upon the kidneys, and when normal action was restored, the trouble with my back disappeared. I have not had any return of it."

NEWS OF MINNESOTA

Manufactories.

Washington.—In the five years from 1900 to 1905 the value of the aggregate annual products of the manufacturing establishments of Minnesota increased more than 37 per cent. In 1900 the total value of the products of the manufacturing industries of the state amounted to $224,000,000 in round numbers, while during 1905 they amounted to $307,000,000.

The detailed figures of the manufacturing business of Minnesota made public by the census bureau covers the returns for the state during 1905, compared with 1900, not only on the aggregate of the entire state, but the figures for the cities of St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth are given separately, and a comparative summary of the aggregate business in the selected industries of dairy products, lumber, slaughtering and packing and flour and grist mill products are given.

With respect to the aggregate business of the manufacturing establishments of the state, it is shown that there were 4,096 manufacturing establishments in 1900, with a capital stock of $133,000,000, a percentage of increase in number of 16 per cent and an increase of capital stock of 38 per cent. While the total number of wage earners in the manufacturing plants decreased 2 per cent, there was an increase in wages of 15 per cent, so that in 1905 wage earners in Minnesota factories to the number of 69,396 received in wages $35,705,873. The cost of the materials utilized by these establishments increased 39 per cent, the total cost last year being $210,000,000.

Drainage.

St. Paul.—Drainage bonds will be taken by the state investment board hereafter on engineers' estimates of cost, without waiting for the counties to spend the money. The board decided on this action, which will facilitate drainage work. The state will furnish the money as it is needed, instead of waiting and forcing the counties to raise money elsewhere to pay contractors till the work is all finished.

A Model Town.

Duluth.—Over 400 applications have been made for lots in the new model town of Coleraine, which will shortly be opened by the United States Steel corporation near Bovey. All applicants must furnish references as to their reliability before they can become owners of lots. This will be the only town on the entire Mesaba range that has been promoted by the steel corporation, and the outcome of the policy will be watched with interest, particularly in view of the determination to build a model town.

Will Tour Norway.

Northfield.—The students' band of St. Olaf college is to make a tour of Norway during the coming year. For some time President Kildahl of St. Olaf college has had in mind a visit to Norway by a number of the students. They have for years had a brass band at St. Olaf, numbering sixty persons, now under the leadership of Prof. Mellus Christianson, formerly of Minneapolis.

Last summer when the student chorus from the University of Christiania visited Northfield this brass band received them at the railroad depot with the martial national hymn of Norway, and the visitors declared the band equal to any they had ever heard. The idea of a visit to Norway was then first suggested, and has now taken tangible form. Preparations are in progress to arrange all the details of the journey.

Will Rebuild.

Duluth.—The Peavey terminal elevator, which was destroyed by the fire on Rice's Point, will be rebuilt as soon as possible, and meantime a temporary house will be erected to be used as a shipper to load the grain out of the big concrete annex of the burned working house.

The burned house was of wood, but it is altogether likely, according to A. L. Searle of Minneapolis, manager of the Peavey elevators at the Head of the Lakes, that the new house will be constructed of fireproof material. There are two and one-half million bushels of grain in the annex, and the temporary shipping house will be made ready to handle this grain by the opening of navigation if possible. The new permanent elevator will be of the same size as the one just destroyed, which was 1,000,000 bushels.

News Notes.

Minneapolis.—The three boys suspected of having robbed the store of E. L. Friedlund, 1901 Central avenue, have been rounded up by the police.

St. Paul.—The new quarters recently secured in Knights of Columbus hall by the Crusaders' Total Abstinence society were formally opened at a smoker and house warming.

St. Paul.—Frank J. Collins of Hastings was discharged from bankruptcy in the United States district court yesterday by Judge William Lochren.

AWFUL PSORIASIS 35 YEARS.

Terrible Scaly Humor in Patches All Over the Body—Skin Cracked and Bleeding—Cured by Cuticura.

"I was afflicted with psoriasis for thirty-five years. It was in patches all over my body. I used three cakes of Cuticura Soap, six boxes of Ointment, and two bottles of Resolvent. In thirty days I was completely cured, and I think permanently, as it was about five years ago. The psoriasis first made its appearance in red spots, generally forming a circle, leaving in the center a spot about the size of a silver dollar of sound flesh. In a short time the affected circle would form a heavy dry scale of a white silvery appearance and would gradually drop off. To remove the entire scales by bathing or using oil to soften them the flesh would be perfectly raw, and a light discharge of bloody substance would ooze out. That scaly crust would form again in twenty-four hours. It was worse on my arms and limbs, although it was in spots all over my body, also on my scalp. If I let the scales remain too long without removing by bath or otherwise, the skin would crack and bleed. I suffered intense itching, worse at nights after getting warm in bed, or blood warm by exercise, when it would be almost unbearable. W. M. Chidester, Hutchinson, Kan., April 20, 1905."

"Yes," Ten Times.

Here are the final cablegrams in an international romance: "Buenos Ayres.—Ada Craufurd: Will you marry me now? Answer at once. Eugene Tulian." "New York.—Eugene Tuilan: Yes. Ada Craufurd." Of course you remember the story of the other girl who got a proposal by telegraph. She asked the clerk how many words she could sent for a quarter. He said ten, and her answer was: "Yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes!"—Boston Globe.

To Clean Oil Paintings.

Many are not aware that oil paintings may be successfully cleaned by an amateur. Dip a cloth in tepid Ivory Soap suds and wring almost dry. Go over the picture very carefully until dirt and fly specks are removed, then apply boiled linseed oil with a flannel cloth.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

SENATOR TILLMAN'S OPPORTUNITY FOR SPEECHMAKING.

A RECALCITRANT MEMBER

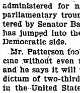
Mr. Bailey of Texas Beau Ideal of Public Speaker—Our Commerce Carried Under Our Own Flag.

WASHINGTON.—If there is one member of the United States senate who is having the time of his life at this session it is that Cyclopean statesman from South Carolina, Benjamin Ryan Tillman. More subjects have come up in the senate this session that have afforded him an opportunity of making characteristic speeches than there have been for several years. He is opposed to the tendency of corporations to monopolize trade and destroy competition, and in the railroad rate legislation and the propositions to investigate combinations of railroads Mr. Tillman has had his greatest opportunities to attack corporations in his inimitable manner of speech.

Tillman is nothing if not original and picturesque: He can say things on the floor of the senate that no other man would dare utter. He excuses it on the ground that he is "a plain, blunt man." When he first came to the senate the sticklers for senatorial propriety, like the late Senator Hoar of Massachusetts and Senator Platt of Connecticut, would take Tillman to task for his almost brutal form of speech when referring to his colleagues or government officials. The senator would promise to be good, but on the next occasion his temper would get the best of him and he would spit out words that were patently unparliamentary. The mentors of the senate got tired finally of trying to reform the one-eyed iconoclast from South Carolina and he is now allowed his own sweet way, unless he gets absolutely insulting.

Mr. Tillman is now at home in his state patching up a few breaches in his political fences. He is a candidate for reelection next year, and already considerable opposition has developed. The old regime in South Carolina, the silk stocking aristocracy, do not relish being represented in the United States senate by a farmer like Mr. Tillman. The latter secured his election by an appeal to the common people, and he is still catering to that element.

Attaining Notoriety.



ANOTHER Democratic senator has attained considerable notoriety this winter and is now an object of curiosity to strangers who visit the capitol. The latter want to see a man who has had the hardihood in these days of party discipline to take an independent course and defy the orders of his party caucus. This man is Thomas MacDonald Patterson, an Irishman by birth, with all the fighting proclivities of his nationality. Mr. Patterson refused to be bound by the Democratic caucus on the question of the ratification of the San Domingan treaty and he received one of the severest lectures and castigations on the floor of the senate that has been administered for many years. This parliamentary trouncing was administered by Senator Bailey, of Texas, who has jumped into the leadership on the Democratic side.

Mr. Patterson took his dose of medicine without even making a wry face and he says it will take more than the dictum of two-thirds of the Democrats in the United States senate to read him out of the party. Somewhat like Cataline of old, he defied them and declared that if he went he would return and at the next national Democratic convention he would be there to greet his Democratic friends and to do business as a delegate from Colorado. Mr. Patterson was no match for Mr. Bailey in the colloquy that arose over the former's recalcitrancy. He has not the voice nor the presence that belong to the young statesman from Texas. Mr. Bailey is the perfection of manhood in appearance, being six feet tall, splendidly proportioned and without superfluous flesh. His face is as round, full and as highly colored as that of a boy of 16. His dark eyes are clear and his hair as black as a raven's wing. He is an unusually handsome man and that, coupled with oratorical ability and brains, make him the beau ideal of a public speaker and statesman.

Ship Subsidy Bill.

AFTER many years there is good prospect that congress will pass a ship subsidy bill. This old subject has been before congress for many many years and has been fought over in both houses of congress by earnest, honest advocates and opponents, and at last it seems as though the principle of aiding the American merchant marine by giving a bounty to ships constructed in this country and sailed under the American flag is to be recognized. The bill that is likely to become law, it having already passed the senate, does not make any great draft upon the public funds. In fact for several years none of the present revenues of the treasury will have to be touched, as the subsidy will be furnished by an additional tonnage tax levied upon the vessels. The present proposition only contemplates the granting of a bounty or subsidy for ten years.

The one fact that appealed to congress more than any other in favor of subsidizing the American merchant marine is that less than ten per cent. of our foreign commerce is carried under the American flag. The old homely illustration of a merchant hiring the delivery wagons of a competing firm to deliver his goods has been used with good effect in pressing the necessity of this country furnishing the ships that carry our commerce to the world.

This bill has been fought through for years by Senators Frye of Maine and Gallinger of New Hampshire, and to them belongs much of the credit if it becomes a law. They found it difficult to arouse a sentiment in the country outside the districts that are interested in shipbuilding, but by their persistent efforts they have finally convinced the western wheat and cattle grower that it would be to his advantage to ship his products throughout the world under the American flag.

"Uncle Joe's" Gifts.

IF Speaker Cannon were to accept all the gifts that are offered him he would have enough to furnish his person and house for years to come. He is averse to receiving presents and turns down any that arouses suspicion that their tender has been made for some ulterior motive. In contrast to most of the offers of presents the gifts of some southern friends have been accepted gratefully and appreciatively by "Uncle Joe." Down in North Carolina, where he was born, there is an old lady who never saw him, but who has watched his public career and believes that he has brought honor to his native state, although he left it when but a child.

This old lady has not forgotten the frontier art of spinning yarn and weaving cloth. Last fall she wove with her own hands, on an old-fashioned loom, a web of homespun cloth that is a marvel of fine texture and workmanship. She sent to Speaker Cannon enough of the cloth to make him a suit of clothes. He had his tailor manufacture the garments, and all winter he has proudly worn that dark gray suit of homespun while presiding over the house. It is a becoming suit and has excited the admiration of all his friends.

Another North Carolina lady knit the speaker a pair of white wool socks, such as kept our ancestors' feet warm when deer skin moccasins were more plentiful than fine leather shoes. Still another gift came from the same state in the shape of a pair of knit suspenders or "galluses" as they were known in "Uncle Joe's" boyhood. He has put these away in his cabinet to preserve for his grandchildren, so they may know what sort of clothing was worn in their grandfather's early days. To make his outfit complete, Col. Hemphill, of Charleston, S. C., sent the speaker a genuine "wool hat."

BREAKS LEG PULLING ON BOOT.

Hartford, Conn.—Andrew J. Curtiss is a commercial traveler. In the course of his wanderings, incident to the life of all such in his occupation, he happened in Granby and stopped there over night. He is evidently a strenuous sort of a man, for when he arose in the morning and was dressing, he broke a bone in his right leg while engaged in the simple operation of pulling on his boot. This unusual occurrence has brought about a lawsuit in which Mr. Curtiss is the plaintiff and the Connecticut Travelers' Mutual Accident association is the defendant.

MINNESOTA ITEMS.

St. Paul.—Unconscious man found in roadway after lying there six hours.

Minneapolis.—Minnesota railroads show increased gross earnings of about ten million.

St. Paul.—The code omission of standing appropriations will not necessitate an extra session of the legislature.

St. Paul.—The will of Mrs. Martha A. Bolkcom bequeaths $51,000 to the Protestant orphan asylum and the Home for the Friendless.

St. Paul.—Norval Baptie defeats Sinnirud, the Norwegian champion skater, at the downtown rink.

Minneapolis.—The traveling men of the Northwest will ask the railway companies to grant them a 2-cent fare.

Minneapolis.—Gov. Johnson says he would rather be a Minnesota farmer than attain the riches and reputation of Rockefeller.

St. Paul.—The union depot directors recommend alterations to secure more room at the depot.

Minneapolis.—The federal court sustains the demurrer of the state savings bank in the suit brought to recover on the defalcations of W. B. Bourne.

Duluth.—Judge Phineas Ayer, one of the most familiar figures in Duluth, died today at St. Luke's hospital. Judge Ayer was 76 years of age.

St. Paul.—Low railroad rates are expected for the conventions in St. Paul next summer.

St. Paul.—Signers of D. W. Doty's certificate of nomination may be debarred from voting at primaries.

Minneapolis.—J. J. Wise, who has a coffee store at 9 Sixth street north, was assaulted in his own store at midnight and robbed of $40.

Minneapolis.—February's building figures will be phenomenally large, and will far exceed the record for any other February in the history of the city.

Washington.—The senate passed the bill permitting the building of a dam across the Red river in Red Lake county, Minnesota.

Inver Grove.—A dog thought to be rabid bit the 5-year-old daughter of L. H. Newbergh of Lincoln park, and was captured here.

Duluth.—The underwriters concerned with the insurance loss on the Peavey terminal elevator, recently burned, have not yet sold the grain in the ruins. The men who were on the ground early with bids are still refusing to raise their offers, and it is said are getting "cold feet."

Duluth.—A very flattering offer has been received by Supt. Mackenzie of the Pettit iron mines to take charge of the mines in China near Tien Tsin. Mr. Mackenzie has the offer under consideration. Mr. Mackenzie's brother is in the diamond drill business in China.

Cass Lake.—Ernest Flemming, the merchant who was severely burned at the time of the fire in his place of business at Bena, has recovered to the extent that he has returned to Bena from the hospital at Grand Rapids, whither he was taken on a special train a few hours after the fire.

St. Peter.—The Minnesota State fair short-ship circuit, composed of six county fairs that have banded themselves together for the purpose of securing better racing events, has completed its organization by electing George Atchison, Mankato, president; F. J. Dunnecliffe, Windom, vice president, and E. E. Miller, St. Peter, secretary.

Duluth.—T. E. Kroust, a brakeman in the employ of the Duluth & Iron Range road, met death here yesterday. He was attempting to open the knuckle of an automatic coupler while the train was moving five miles an hour, and slipped and fell on the rail. Several cars passed over him and he died soon after he was taken to the hospital.

Minneapolis.—Martin Rogers, steamfitter, living at 815 Fourteenth avenue south, met with a very mysterious death on Sixteenth avenue south, near Franklin avenue. His lifeless body was found hanging by the neck, between two pickets on a fence.

Duluth.—Charles Johnson, the Minneapolis railroad contractor, will build the extension of the Duluth, Virginia & Rainy Lake railroad from its present terminus at Ashawa, northward to the boundary where it is connected with the Canadian Northern. This is a district of about one hundred miles.

Biwabik.—Fire totally destroyed the Bray hospital, two patients and a number of attendants asleep in the building barely escaping with their lives. Firemen fought the flames heroically, and after desperate efforts succeeded in getting all of the inmates out of the building unharmed. When discovered the flames had already made great headway, though the origin of the fire is as yet unknown.

Stillwater.—The state board of control having made a definite statement as to just what its attitude is regarding the so-called Bean and Perro site for a new state prison at Oak Park, residents in that vicinity are now actively engaged in an endeavor to reduce the price for lands there to $12,500, the amount the board has agreed to pay.

St. Paul.—Out of 5,107 who took the recent state teachers' examinations, 2,315 received certificates. Not all the others failed, as many took only part of the subjects, to get credit on later examinations. The certificates issued were as follows: First grade, 176; conditional first, 91; second grade, 1,076; conditional second, 391; limited, 581.

THE SUNBEAM.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

These warm spring days are liable to thaw out the politicians, but the newspaper boys will not kill themselves lugging ice if they do thaw out.

Some of the business men in the Cities and Villages tributary to this part of the country, are beginning to catch on to the fact, that if they want to advertise their business to the people on this reservation that they must do it in a paper that the people read.

Governor Johnson is continually giving out reports of different laws that he is going to recommend for passage at the next session of the legislature; and don't never say, if I am elected governor. He may be right in his calculatons, but we are of the opinion that Frank M. Eddy would make him go some.

"Take that railroad bill," said the new member, who was after information, "what do you make out of that?" Humph grunted the old member, whose mind was on something else, "the railroad and I have not yet came to an understanding."—Minneapolis Daily News. It looks as if the railroads and Senator Foraker had came to an understanding.

It is the sagacious enemy that sows discord in the ranks of the opposition—and the friends of drainage should endeavor and keep their charges counter charges and bickerings out of the press. Northern Minnesota needs the united support of all who believe in drainage, no matter what methods may be favored to secure it.–The Duluth News Tribune.

The Duluth Evening Herald, advises sending our best men from the northern part of the state to the next legislature. It is all right to have your best and stongest men down ther until they forget about the best interest of their constituents and join the railroad lobby, then you might wish they were at home and that you had some fool in their place that did not know so much and did not have such a strong pull.

Our County Superintendent of schools H. T McNulty has been very kind to render all the assistance to the new school districts in this part of the county that he possibly could, to help them to get school districts organized and school houses built. We may be able to repay that debt of kindness some day, as the people on this reservation are human beings and are known to be friendly to white people.

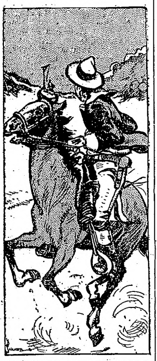
The opinion is growing that the next republican candidate to win must be nominated by a convention of uninstructed delegates and he must be a man who will unite and be acceptable to all the elements of the party. The candidates who make an active canvass for the nomination will be handicapped. Call an early convention, let the delegates go uninstructed or for their favorite sons for first choice, and then let the delegates unite on one man who will give all fair play. A man so selected, if he be capable and honest, will win, without question.–St Hilaire Spectator.

He Caught A Ghost

Strange Episode In the Career of a United States Senator.

Saw a Weird Figure Beneath a Gibbet In the Gray Dawn of Early Morning.

One might never think of ghosts being associated with the hustling town of Lewiston, Ida. It is situated on the banks of the Snake river, whose placid green waters glide slowly along on their way to the yet greener Pacific ocean, a few hundred miles away, but Lewiston has a ghost story, and its principal actor is now a member of the dignified United States senate, a man who in the early days of the west had a varied experience with Indians, stage robbers and all such affairs, but none so hair raising as the Lewiston ghost.



HE DISTINGUISHED THE DARK OUTLINE OF A GIBBET AND THE NUDE FORM OF A MAN BENEATH.

The cattlemen of the far northwest did not have "roundups" such as are had by the cowboys of Texas. They had what they termed a "captain," whose duty it was to be at a certain point at a given time and receive reports from the men who had been riding the ranges. Thus it was that the owners of cattle were advised as to their stock and its increase. The principal of this story was at that time in the cattle business with his father and was the "captain" of the range.

One morning he arose with the sun to go to the designated place of meeting and receive reports. He threw a saddle on the back of his cayuse, strapped an army overcoat purchased at the post commissary store back at the horn of the saddle so that when the animal bucked the rider was protected from serious injury. Then he jumped into the saddle, drew the reins taut, holding up the head of the cayuse, and started out.

Not many miles from Lewiston there is a deep depression of the land. It looks like an old lake bed. It is hidden from view by steep hills. At the base of the depression there was a gibbet, which was occasionally used to dispose of characters who would not be missed by the law abiding community and whose presence had developed the majesty of the vigilante law. On one side little mounds of earth and stones marked the number of executions which had taken place. It was a dismal, lonely spot. Visits were made to it only when occasion demanded.

From some reason the "captain" took this road to the place of rendezvous. The cayuse had done some little bucking, but unavailingly. The sun was glowing beautifully over the eastern range of the Rockies. The bunch grass, covered with cold gray frost, snapped under the pony's feet. He had not noticed that he was approaching the dismal valley until the cayuse wheeled and snorted in fear. The rider glanced around and distinguished the dark outline of the gibbet not far away. Then, to his amazement, he discovered what seemed to be the nude form of a man standing beneath the tool of death. He had heard of ghosts walking there in the dead of night and always laughed at their earnestness of detail. But this time he certainly saw an object there, and so did the animal. Sensations most peculiar traveled along his spinal column and agitated the roots of his hair. He was startled, but concluded to investigate. He urged the pony forward, and the ghost ran.

Now, a real sensible ghost would have run up the grassy incline, but this naked ghost chose the rocky ridge. The future senator put spur to his steed and finally caught up with the naked object. He jumped off, but the pony pulled back and away, and the ghost escaped. Another chase and then another. Finally a blanket thrown over the head of the pony made him behave, and the ever present cowboy's lasso soon brought that ghost to bay.

It was a man, all right, but shivering, scarred, black and blue. Not a word would the object speak. It struggled to get away, but its captor hung on and finally got the naked man enveloped in the old army overcoat. The next thing was what to do with the prisoner? Duty demanded the presence of the "captain" at the appointed meeting place, and it was an ethic of the range that appointments must be kept. Duty also demanded that the ghost be taken to town. At last the captive was tied securely in the saddle, and the future senator trudged back to town, leading the astonished cayuse with his uncanny load.

No sooner had the procession reached the outskirts of the town than it became evident that something unusual had occurred. The sheriff came running to meet the cattleman. The people slunk away. Terror seemed to be in the air.

The mild, gentle, unassuming gentleman who is now seen daily in the United States senate had captured a runaway smallpox patient, who died of exposure soon after his return to town. His former keeper also died. The cayuse took it and died. The "captain" lost his overcoat and all of his clothing. He missed his engagement with the cowboys, but lived to reach the United States senate.

Atmosphere.

There is a wide difference of opinion among the learned men of the world as to what would be the effect of wholly removing the atmosphere. Some think that if it were possible to live afterward all the stars, planets, etc., would be visible in broad daylight. Others declare that there would be no day and that the sun itself could not be seen under such conditions.

LOCAL PARAGRAPHS.

We have a nice little March blizzard on tap to day.

Applications to make final proof written free at this office.

March came in like a lamb, the lion roar may be expected later.

Singer Bros. have a large stock of flour for sale at Rhoda, at rock bottom prices.

Come and see us when you are ready to preve up on your land.

Mrs. Tom Sullivan returned from Crystal N.D. on Wednesday evening and Mr. Sullivan is rejoiceing that his few weeks batching are ended.

A creamery will not be built at Rhoda this season, but one will be built on the Clearwater river near the Rollinson place,

P Sullivan is building a new grainery so as to be ready for this years crop. Wallace Grace is doing the carpenter work for him.

Thomas Jacobson, our town clerk is suffering from a bad attact of snow blindness, which he caught while hawling school house lumber from Plummer.

Read the advertisement of H. H. Finrow, the live merchant of Plummer in an other colum of this paper and call and see him when in town.

Hans Hommy, Idan Thoreson and Ole Sunsdahl were at Crookston last Tuesday, where Mr. Hommy made final proof on his homestead,

Jerry O'Brien has a fine saddle poney that will let either Tom or Jerry ride him but he draws the line on "Tom and Jerry" rideing at the same time,

Farmers, who are going to do fencing this spring should call on E. B. Laneger, at Plummer Pioneer Hardware Store, for all kinds of fencing. Will make prices right.

The spring election promises to be rather a warm one at McIntosh, the license question being the main issue. Of course all the druggist's and blind piggers are lined up with the temperance people fighting license,

We hope to see a good big turn out to election next Tuesday, and as there was a slight kick at the caucus, on Tuesday, by the people from the north part of the town, that the south part was getting all the offices, there is liable to be a big vote poled,

Frank Zaveral was a caller here Monday to get a petition compleated to organize a school district in the south east corner of this Township. There seems to be plenty of people and children liveing over there to justify the county board in organizeing the district.

Daniel Sullivan, A. Eve and Walt McAndrees went to Crookston on Monday last, where Mr. Sullivan made final proof on his homestead before the U. S. Land office on Tuesday. Mr. McAndrees and Sullivan returned Wednesday evening Mr. Eve is at Thief River Falls until to day to look after some business matters

The boat meeting at High Landing on Tuesday, while not as well attended as it should have been, resulted in much good being done for the upbuilding of this part of the county. D.N. Vinton, representing the Thief River Falls logging company was presant at the meeting and furnished much valuable imformation to the farmers about the expense of building and running a boat. The meeting to be held at Kratka tomorrow afternoon will decide the question whether the farmers will build a boat, or accept the propisition of Mr. Vinton to do their freighting for them.

Ole Overum was nominated for Township supervisor in the place of C. Gulrud, who served on the board last year.

T.S.Jackobson, Ole Overum, A.W.Shuston and B. Pederson of High Landing made this office a pleasant call Wednesday evening.

Wm. Halverson, the McIntosh liveryman left for Colarado on Monday last. Mr. Halverson has eccepted a position as traveling salesman for a Colorado land company.

Our subscription list took a substancial jog upward the past week and the patronage of our advertiseing colums also made a foward movement.

Mixed Feelings.

The little girl who, after a drink of soda, declared that her nose felt as if her foot was asleep has evidently grown up and retained her happy power of expression, for evidently the young lady mentioned in Punch is the same person who drank bubbles when she was small.

The young woman was traveling in a coach as an elderly and somewhat sour looking man, in trying to open the window, pinched his finger nail severely.

"Oh!" exclaimed the lady sympathetically. "How horrid! I always think anything wrong with one's nails sets one's teeth on edge all down one's back!"

Honors Easy.

People who were present smiled at the little passage of arms which took place between two young ladies at a luncheon recently. One of them, a bride, shaking hands in her characteristically cordial way, said to the other: "I'm so glad to meet you! You have afforded me so very much amusement just lately."

"Amusement?" said the other.

"Oh, yes," went on the bride. "I've been through my husband's desk and have read all his old love letters. I found several very affectionate letters from you, and I enjoyed reading them really ever so much."

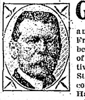
"I'm so glad you enjoyed them," replied the other. "But do come and see me very soon. Here is my card. I have the answers to all those letters, and you might like to read them as well. Mr. X.'s letters are so much more affectionate than those I wrote to him. I know you'll enjoy reading them ever so much more than you did mine."

The Frosted Hand.

"Yes, and after she refused me she waved her hand in farewell."

"Sort of cold wave, wasn't it?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Short Stories About a Few People of Prominence



HORACE PORTER.

GENERAL HORACE PORTER, former ambassador to France, who has been appointed one of the representatives of the United States at the peace conference at The Hague, believes in arbitration, though he was a gallant fighter in days gone by when there was hard fighting to be done. General Porter was an ardent admirer of General Grant, on whose staff he served during the latter part of the civil war. He is always in great demand as an after dinner speaker. At a dinner given to the late Henry M. Stanley he once said:

"I am somewhat of an explorer myself. The first time I went abroad I determined to explore Ireland. I went from north to south to discover the spot where, it is said, one of my ancestors lived, near Londonderry. I met a man who informed me about it. In fact, I began to believe that every man in that part of Ireland was an informer. I said I was looking for my ancestors who emigrated to America about 100 years before. The man looked at me in a quizzical way and, with a sort of mildewed countenance, said, 'You're looking for your ancestors?' I said I was. He replied: 'You said they emigrated to America 100 years ago. Then why are you looking for them here?' I said: 'My friend, that settles it. I will dally with them no longer.'"

And he didn't.

There is no more energetic advocate of irrigation legislation in the United States senate than Francis E. Warren of Wyoming. Not long ago Senator Warren in a speech in the senate told of one of the garden spots which had been made by a Mormon colony and raised its industry and sobriety and wound up with a statement that there had never been a case of polygamy in the colony.

"I would like to ask the senator," put in Senator Patterson of Colorado, "what all that has got to do with the repeal of the desert land act."

"Who is making this speech anyway?" retorted Warren.

The incident has a special significance in view of the report that on the famous Taft Philippine excursion the senator from Wyoming and the senator from Colorado were rivals for the hand of the same fair lady, Mrs. Mabel Nagle of Cheyenne. The Wyoming statesman won. The circumstance will still further enhance Secretary Taft's reputation as a matchmaker, as this is the third engagement resulting from the Philippine trip, the others being those of Miss Roosevelt and Mr. Longworth and Congressman Swager Sherley of Louisville and Miss Mignon Critten of Staten Island, New York.

SENATOR FRANCIS E. WARREN.

Senator Warren is sixty-two and Mrs. Nagle thirty-two. He is a large landholder and owns sheep by tens of thousands. She, too, is rich. About six years ago she married George H. Nagle, a wealthy merchant of Cheyenne. The union was unhappy, and a divorce resulted. While they were still living together their coachman, who had become infatuated with Mrs. Nagle, but found that his affection was not reciprocated, shot himself in the stable. Senator Warren was formerly governor of Wyoming.

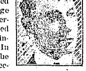
Captain Frank Frantz, who was inaugurated as governor of the territory of Oklahoma on Jan. 1, owes his position as a territorial executive in part to the fact that he is a good boxer. He is a member of a family of athletes, and one of his brothers is famous as a baseball player and known as "Home Run Frantz." Governor Frantz went to Harvard and besides studying the dead languages and mathematics learned how to handle himself well in a contest with gloves. When the Spanish war came along he joined the rough riders. He fought as a lieutenant on San Juan hill, and his gallantry on that occasion led to his promotion to be a captain. As lieutenant colonel and later colonel of the regiment Mr. Roosevelt became familiar with the courageous record of Captain Frantz, and not long after he became president he appointed his old comrade to a postmastership. A little later the president wanted a good man for the Osage Indian agency and asked Secretary Hitchcock to appoint Frantz. The latter did not want to accept, as he thought the postmastership was the better place, but when he heard that the president wished him to do so and that there were grafters to be cleaned out he said he would do anything his old commander ordered. One day Captain Frantz was at the White House, and the president asked him to put on the gloves. He did so, and the chief magistrate came out of the contest second best. His respect for the captain was so much increased that he took the first opportunity to show it and at the same time reward him for his faithful service as Indian agent. That was how Frantz got his appointment as governor.

CAPTAIN FRANK FRANTZ.

Harry S. Lehr, who was a witness in the case which recently brought into such prominence the publication known as Town Topics, is a very versatile man. He has occupied a conspicuous position in the smart set for some years, and his name has appeared frequently in the columns of Colonel Mann's journal of society. According to one witness in the Deuel-Mann-Hapgood suit, Mr. Lehr was put on the list of those "immune" from criticism by Town Topics and also written up without charge in "Fads and Fancies" on the understanding that he was to supply information about what was going on in the world of the rich and gay. This, however, he denied. He stated on the witness stand that his occupation was that of an agent of wines, but this vocation does not interfere with his leading cotillons and devising entertainments to aid the members of the smart set in driving away that tired feeling. In fact, it has been said that the makers of the wines in whose sale he is interested consider themselves fortunate in having so popular a member of exclusive society as their representative. Some seasons ago Mr. Lehr made a great hit by appearing as a soubrette in amateur theatricals. He wore a decollete costume, did skirt dances and sang ragtime songs, to the great amusement of his friends.

HARRY S. LEHR.

Herbert James Hagerman, the new executive of the territory of New Mexico, has the distinction of being one of the youngest governors in the United States. He was born in 1871 in Milwaukee, but during his youth and early manhood his family lived in Colorado. New Mexico has been his home since 1895. He attended Colorado college and Cornell university and graduated from the latter institution in 1894. In 1897 he secured the appointment as second secretary to the American legation at St. Petersburg. This was during the time that Ethan Allen Hitchcock, now secretary of the interior, was the representative of the United States at the court of the czar, and the record made by Mr. Hagerman created a good impression on the elder diplomat. Mr. Hagerman returned to the United States and to his home in New Mexico, where he practiced law and engaged in business. In due time Mr. Hitchcock showed his appreciation of the services of his former subordinate in the diplomatic service by urging President Roosevelt to make him governor of the territory.



HERBERT J. HAGERMAN.

And the president took the secretary's advice.

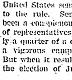
"An odd client," he said, "called on a legal friend of mine one morning. She was an extremely pretty client, but her clear, soft eyes were red with weeping, and her little form shook with sobs. 'Well, my dear,' said he (perhaps I should explain that this client was hardly more than seven or eight years old)—'well, my dear, what can I do for you?'

"'Please, sir,' said the child, weeping piteously, 'I want to get a divorce from my papa and mamma.'"

Political contests in Kentucky are usually exciting, and that which ended in the choice of Thomas H. Paynter to succeed Joseph C. S. Blackburn in the United States senate was no exception to the rule. Senator Blackburn has been a conspicuous figure in the house of representatives and senate for nearly a quarter of a century, and he made a vigorous campaign for re-election. But when it resulted in his defeat and the election of Judge Paynter as his successor he paid a high tribute to the character and ability of his victorious rival.



T. H. PAYNTER.

Senator Elect Paynter is a native Kentuckian and was born in Lewis county on Dec. 19, 1851. His early education was acquired in the public schools and was supplemented by study in the Rand academy and a course at Center college at Danville. He was admitted to the bar in 1873 and was county attorney at Greenup for several years. He was elected to the Fifty-first congress and was twice re-elected, serving from 1886 until 1895. In 1894 he was elected to the appellate court, being re-elected in 1902. Judge Paynter has a wife and two children and is a man of fine physique and genial manners.

Monster Beds.

Though the beds of the royal personages of England were elaborately carved and hung with rich curtains even so late as the Tudor period, it is recorded that King Henry VIII.'s bed contained only straw beneath all its finery. A curious order exists as to precautions to be taken against the possibility of intended mischief to the royal person in the making of the bed, for the usher was to search the straw through with a dagger, "that there be none untruth therein, and to tumble over on the down bed for the better search thereof." The bed of Henry VIII. was nearly eleven feet square, and of even more generous dimensions is the great bed to which Shakespeare refers in a well known passage in "Twelfth Night," which was twelve feet square. This "great bed of Ware" has been a marvel for centuries.

NERVOUS DYSPEPSIA

A Desperately Serious Case Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Brought to the very verge of starvation by the rejection of all nourishment, her vitality almost destroyed, the recovery of Mrs. J. A. Wyatt, of No. 1189 Seventh street, Des Moines, Iowa, seemed hopeless. Her physicians utterly failed to reach the seat of the difficulty and death must have resulted if she had not pursued an independent course suggested by her sister's experience.

Mrs. Wyatt says: "I had pain in the region of the heart, palpitation and shortness of breath so that I could not walk very fast. My head ached very badly and I was seized with vomiting spells whenever I took any food. A doctor was called who pronounced the trouble gastritis, but he gave me no relief. Then I tried a second doctor without benefit. By this time I had become very weak. I could not keep the most delicate broth on my stomach, and at the end of a month I was scarcely more than skin and bone and was really starving to death.

"Then I recalled how much benefit my sister had got from Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and decided to take them in place of the doctor's medicine. It proved a wise decision for they helped me as nothing else had done. Soon I could take weak tea and crackers and steadily more nourishment. In two weeks I was able to leave my bed. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were the only thing that checked the vomiting and as soon as that was stopped my other difficulties left me. I have a vigorous appetite now and am able to attend to all the duties of my home. I praise Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People to all my friends because I am thoroughly convinced of their merit."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists and by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N.Y.

THEN HE DIDN'T GO UP.

The Principal Reason Being Sidetracked the Caller Failed to Show.

H. A. Buck was calling on Prof. Jenks, of Cornell, at the St. Francis hotel the other day, relates the San Francisco Chronicle. They were exchanging raillery and beclouding the ambient atmosphere with much smoke, when a brass-buttoned bellboy cut short their banter by handing the Cornell professor a card.

"Pardon me a moment, Harry," said Prof. Jenks, as he proceeded to read an inscription on the card. It read:

"Some years ago, on the occasion of a visit to Alaska, I enjoyed the pleasure of meeting your father, and I would be deeply sensible of the privilege and honor of shaking hands with his son."

"How old was the man that sent up this card?" asked Prof. Jenks of the bellboy.

"About 30, sir," said the bellboy.

A thought clouded the brow of President Roosevelt's representative for a moment. Then he wrote something on the back of the card and handed it back to the bellboy. The something on the back of the card read:

"My father died 37 years ago. If you have any other good reason for wishing to see me I should be pleased to have you come up."

Black Splotches All Over Face—Affected Parts Now Clear as Ever—Cured by the Cuticura Remedies.

"About four years ago I was afflicted with black splotches all over my face and a few covering my body, which produced a severe itching irritation, and which caused me a great deal of annoyance and suffering, to such an extent that I was forced to call in two of the leading physicians of my town. After a thorough examination of the dreaded complaint they announced it to be skin eczema in its worst form. They treated me for the same for the length of one year, but the treatment did me no good. Finally my husband purchased a set of the Cuticura Remedies, and after using the contents of the first bottle of Cuticura Resolvent in connection with the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, the breaking out entirely stopped. I continued the use of the Cuticura Remedies for six months, and after that every splotch was entirely gone and the affected parts were left as clear as ever. The Cuticura Remedies not only cured me of that dreadful disease, eczema, but other complicated troubles as well. Lizzie E. Sledge, 540 Jones Ave., Selma, Ala. Oct. 28, 1905."

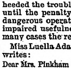
HOSPITALS CROWDED

MAJORITY OF PATIENTS WOMEN

Mrs. Pinkham's Advice Saves Many From this Sad and Costly Experience.



Miss Luella Adams

It is a sad but certain fact that every year brings an increase in the number of operations performed upon women in our hospitals. More than three-fourths of the patients lying on those snow-white beds are women and girls who are awaiting or recovering from operations made necessary by neglect.

Every one of these patients had plenty of warning in that bearing down feeling, pain at the left or right of the abdomen, nervous exhaustion, pain in the small of the back, pelvic catarrh, dizziness, flatulency, displacements or irregularities. All of these symptoms are indications of an unhealthy condition of the female organs, and if not heeded the trouble may make headway until the penalty has to be paid by a dangerous operation, and a lifetime of impaired usefulness at best, while in many cases the results are fatal.

Miss Luella Adams, of Seattle, Wash., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"About two years ago I was a great sufferer from a severe female trouble, pains and headaches. The doctor prescribed for me and finally told me that I had a tumor and must undergo an operation if I wanted to get well. I felt that this was my death warrant, but I spent hundreds of dollars for medical help, but the tumor kept growing. Fortunately I corresponded with an aunt in the New England States, and she advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it was said to cure tumors. I did so and immediately began to improve in health, and I was entirely cured, the tumor disappearing entirely, without an operation. I wish every suffering woman would try this great preparation."

Just as surely as Miss Adams was cured of the troubles enumerated in her letter, just so surely will Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cure other women who suffer from female troubles, inflammation, kidney troubles, nervous excitability or nervous prostration.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all young women who are ill to write her for free advice. She is daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and for twenty-five years has been advising sick women free of charge. Address, Lynn, Mass.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Large Increase.

An increase of over ten millions in the gross earning of the railroads in Minnesota over the earnings for 1904 is shown by the summary of the annual reports for 1905. Partly on this account but especially on account of the change from a 3 to a 4 per cent gross earnings tax the state taxes have increased over a million. The taxes for the year ending Dec. 31, 1905, at 4 per cent, amount to $3,015,645.94. Of this amount all has been paid in except $175,717.01.

The Chicago Great Western, which sent in its report, paid the 4 per cent tax on its branch lines, but reported at the rate of 3 per cent for its main line from St. Paul to the Iowa line, asserting that its territorial charter, which provides that the payment of a 3 per cent tax shall exempt it from all other taxes, exempts from the 4 per cent law. The Great Northern paid a 4 per cent tax on its lines, except on the lines leased leased on the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba, which has a charter since 1857 providing for a 3 per cent tax.

The tax now collected amounts to $2,959,959.93. A year ago the tax was $1,911,707.69 and for 1903 it amounted to $1,971,665.67. The increase over 1904 is $1,048,252.24. The increase over 1903 is $983,337.26. The increase in the earnings amounts to $10,742,696.71. This includes only earnings on business done in the state and not earnings outside the state by railroads doing business in the state.

A Bad Blunder.

St. Paul.—Members of the state board of control made a startling discovery, when they got their first look at the new code of laws.

Standing appropriations of the state prison and reformatory, the three insane hospitals, the Red Wing training school and the institutions at Faribault and Owatonna seem to be omitted from the revision. These appropriations have stood for years, and about covered the running expenses of the institutions. If they have been omitted, an extra session of the legislature must be called at once, or the state's penal, correctional and charitable institutions must go out of business.

Members of the board of control appealed at once to the governor and attorney general. A conference was called, and met in the governors' office. Those present were Governor Johnson, Messrs. Gould, Leavit and Rosing of the board of control, George T. Simpson and C. S. Jelly, assistants to the attorney general. Attorney General Young is absent on a vacation.

The standing appropriations for state departments for the university and the normal schools are plainly cared for in the code, but appropriations estimated at $580,000 for the other institutions have not been located. If they are omitted, it is a colossal blunder. Ten institutions with hundreds of employes and thousands of inmates will have no money for maintenance.

Receives a Medal.

Crookston.—Andrew J. Kelly, a veteran of the Civil war, received a valor metal from the war department with which he would not part as soon as he would release his claim upon his homestead located four miles east of the city upon which he has resided for over a quarter of a century.

The treasured medal is inscribed, "Sgt. Andrew J. Kelly, Knoxville, Nov. 20, 1863," and those few words bring to his mind one of the bloodiest engagements of the Civil war, during which he performed a feat for which he was awarded the valor medal, together with the five others who participated in the gallant deed.

The deed for which the medal was awarded was volunteering to make a dash from the union lines on the night of Nov. 20, '63 at Knoxville with five other men and burn a three-story brick building inside the rebel lines, from which the rebel sharpshooters were picking off the union gunners as fast as they showed their heads.

News in Brief.

St. Paul—St. Paul will try to secure the national bowling tournament in 1908.

St. Paul—The new code omits the standing appropriations for state institutions.

St. Paul—The citizens' league may make street car legislation an issue in the city campaign.

Ada—The socialists of the village have selected candidates to be placed on the ticket at the spring election.

Sauk Center—Mayor Ingram has directed that henceforth the lid be enforced on Sunday. Nearly all the saloon men favor Sunday closing, so little opposition to the order will be made.

Duluth—A holding company comprising six corporations, of which Louis W. Hill, son of J. J. Hill, is president, and ten companies representing the United States Steel company, the Rockefeller interests and private mine owners, have been incorporated for the development lease, and sale of iron ore.

St. Cloud—A contract for the judicial ditch in Kandiyohi county and Chippewa county has been let to Jerry Sherwood at a contract price of 14⅜ cents per cubic yard of excavation. The ditch is approximately fifty miles long, and it is estimated that 501,917 yards of excavating will be necessary, bringing the total cost to $70,600.

Minneapolis—A verdict of guilty was brought in by the jury in the case of the State against Mrs. Emma Anderson and Mrs. Emma Yates, charged with being responsible for burning a small store at 708 Third avenue northeast, last fall.

SCIENTIFIC ITEMS.

Prof. Koch is said to have decided to apply the Nobel prize recently awarded to him to the publication of a complete edition of his scientific writings.

Sir David Gill, who has been astronomer royal at the Cape since 1879, is resigning his post and returning to England for the New Year. Many notable astronomical problems have been solved at the Cape observatory under Sir David Gill's direction, including the determination of the minor planets Victoria, Sappho and Iris.

The problem of the ascent of say in trees, an English botanist points out, is yet unsolved. It appears that in the highest trees the total pressure would be nearly 100 atmospheres, and as we cannot suppose that leaves can exert so intense osmotic suction, the only theory at all probable is that the living cells exert some sort of pumping action in the wood.

M. Martel, a French explorer who has devoted much time to the subject of caves, is confident that the surface of the earth is fast wearing away by erosion and corrosion, in such a manner that the level at which water is found in the earth's crust is being lowered. He thinks that there will be a disastrous scarcity of water available for drinking a few centuries hence.

Gold has been easily distilled by Henri Moissan in the electric furnace, its boiling point being higher than that of copper, but lower than that of lime. In a cold tube, the vapor condensed partly in the form of moss gold, partly as microscopic crystals, the general properties being those of finely divided gold. In alloys with copper and tin, the gold distills over last. On distilling an allow of tin and gold, a purple of Cassius is obtained in the dry way.

TALES OF THE TOTS.

"Dear! Dear! Willie, can't you be good for a quarter of an hour?"

"I can for a quarter of a dollar, ma.

Fred (at the concert)—That man must have a taste for music, papa.

Papa—Which man, Freddie?"

"Why, the one who is trying to swallow the trombone."

Mamma—Oh, dear! Margie, I don't believe you know what it is to be good.

Little Margie—Yes, I do, mamma. It's not doing the things you want to do.

Mamma—Why, Johnny, you have eaten more than your share of the berries!

Johnny—That's all right, mamma. Minnie ate most of the cake we stole yesterday.

"Why do you want a light left in your room when you go to bed, dear?" asked Elsie's mother. "Are you afraid?"

"No mamma," replied Elsie; "I want it so I can see to go to sleep."

Ceylon Rubber.

According to information supplied by the Institute of Tropical Research, recently founded in connection with Liverpool university, Ceylon has, in the last season, shipped 100,000 pounds of rubber, all produced from the island plantations.

A PERFECT HAND.

How Its Appearance Became Familiar to the Public.

The story of how probably the most perfect feminine hand in America became known to the people is rather interesting.

As the story goes the possessor of the hand was with some friends in a photographer's one day and while talking, held up a piece of candy. The pose of the hand with its perfect contour and faultless shape attracted the attention of the artist, who proposed to photograph it. The result was a beautiful picture kept in the family until one day, after reading a letter from someone inquiring as to who wrote the Postum and Grape-Nuts advertisements, Mr. Post said to his wife: "We receive so many inquiries of this kind, that it is evident some people are curious to know, suppose we let the advertising department have that picture of your hand to print and name it 'A Helping Hand.'" (Mrs. Post has assisted him in preparation of some of the most famous advertisements.)

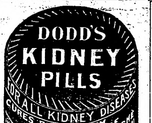
There was a natural shrinking from the publicity, but with an agreement that no name would accompany the picture, its use was granted.

The case was presented in the light of extending a welcoming hand to the friends of Postum and Grape-Nuts, so the picture appeared on the back covers of many of the January and February magazines and became known to millions of people.

Many artists have commented upon it as probably the most perfect hand in the world.

The advertising dept. of the Postum Co. did not seem able to resist the temptation to enlist the curiosity of the public, by refraining from giving the name of the owner when the picture appeared, but stated that the name would be given later in one of the newspaper announcements, thus seeking to induce the readers to look for and read the forthcoming advertisements to learn the name of the owner.

This combination of art and commerce and the multitude of inquiries furnishes an excellent illustration of the interest the public takes in the personal and family life of large manufacturers whose names become household words through extensive and continuous announcements in newspapers and periodicals.



MISTAKE ABOUT FATHER.

Boys Thought He Was to Be Pitied, But Found They Were Mistaken.

At the Waldorf they are telling this story of a Pittsburg millionaire who is over 70, and the way he fooled his son and nephew on a recent visit to the city of the Great White Way. The two young men dined with "father" every evening, and then watched him take the elevator to his quarters, relates the New York Tribune.

"Too bad father has to go to bed at nine every evening," said the son.

"He doesn't have much fun, does he?" returned the nephew.

"Wonder if he goes to sleep right away, or if he'd like us to stay and talk to him?" from the son.

"Let's go up and see," said the nephew, feeling the full grip of compassion.

They found his shoes outside the door waiting for the coming of the bootblack, and there was no light in the transom.

"Poor old man, he doesn't have a very good time over here," they chorused.

Then they went out into the night in a cab, and toward midnight turned into one of the gilded mirrored lobster places. When they were finally seated about a table and had given the waiter his order, they looked about the room. The first individual to meet their astonished gaze was "father," in full evening dress, pouring champagne into a glass which was held by an actress.

"How about the shoes in front of your door?" they asked him afterward.

"It's a pity a man of my age and money can't have two pairs of shoes, my children," he said, with a wink. "Those were my old shoes."

DAZED WITH PAIN.

The Sufferings of a Citizen of Olympia, Wash.

L. S. Gorham, of 516 East 4th St., Olympia, Wash., says: "Six years ago I got wet and took cold, and was soon flat in bed, suffering tortures with my back. Every movement caused an agonizing pain, and the persistency of it exhausted me, so that for a time I was dazed and stupid. On the advice of a friend I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and soon noticed a change for the better. The kidney secretions had been disordered and irregular, and contained a heavy sediment, but in a week's time the urine was clear and natural again and the passages regular. Gradually the aching and soreness left my back and then the lameness. I used six boxes to make sure of a cure, and the trouble has never returned."

KILLED IN EXPLOSION.

Catastrophe in a French Coal Mine Causes Death to over Thousand Miners.

Paris—A mine catastrophe of incalculable horror and magnitude, resulting in the death of nearly 1,200 miners, has stricken the great coal center of northern France.

An explosion of fire damp carried death and destruction throughout the network of coal mines centered at Courrieres, and fire followed the explosion, making rescue difficult and almost impossible.

The intense excitement and confusion in the vicinity prevented early estimates of the exact loss of life, but a dispatch received here gave 1,474 miners entombed and probably lost. A brief dispatch from Tille announced the total loss as 1,193 dead.

All France has been profoundly shocked by the magnitude of the disaster, which is said to be the greatest in the history of continental mining.

President Fallieres sent his secretary, accompanied by Minister of Public Works Cautier and Minister of the Interior Dubief, in a special train to the scene of the disaster.

The catastrophe occurred in the mountainous mining region of Lens, in the department of Pas de Calais. Here are huddled small hamlets of miners who work in the most productive coal mines in France. The subterranean chambers form a series of tunnels.

A rescue party numbering forty has been cut off by the caving in of one of the galleries.

Six of the outlets are near Lens and others at Courrieresa Verdun, and many other points. The output of the mines is particularly combustible and is largely used in the manufacture of gas and in smelting. About 2,000 miners are employed in the group, and with their families form a population of from 6,000 to 8,000.

Trains Collide.

Toledo, Ohio.—Two killed and 15 injured, one of whom will die, is the list of fatalities in a wreck of two freight trains and a passenger train on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad about two miles from Bloomdale. Two engines were completely wrecked and the mail and express cars, two baggage cars, two passenger coaches and four freight cars were completely demolished and later burned.

B. C. Snook, Chicago Junction, mail clerk, was fatally injured.

Saved Lives.

Grand Forks, N. D.—Roused by the fumes of escaping gas, A. G. Daudgren, a traveling man, broke into the adjoining room to that in which he had been sleeping, at a local hotel, and discovered the gas jet turned on, and on the bed a man and woman, both unconscious. He summoned assistance and the couple were worked over for some time and sufficiently revived to tell their story. The man was a local barber, while the woman is said to be a prominent dressmaker of Crookston. The couple denied strenuously that they had attempted to commit suicide, and said that the gas had been turned on accidentally.

Killed by Icy Grass.

Oconomowoc, Wis.—The herds of buffalo and elk on the Valentine grounds have been slaughtered, the only animals retained being a herd of deer. For a year or more the herd of buffalo have been deteriorated, but the case of the ill health of the animals has not been readily ascertained. Cy De Vry, in charge of the zoo in Chicago, was called in consultation and gave it as his opinion that the frost in the grass and clover was injurious to the animals.

Natural Gas.

Superior, Wis.—While the workmen were drilling an artesian well on city property in the East end the eighty feet of pipe suddenly became the outlet of a steady and increasing flow of natural gas. Sand was thrown into the air for a considerable distance from the mouth of the pipe. At one time one of the workmen was in danger of suffocating but he was pulled away. Great excitement prevails in the vicinity of the gas strike.

Wreck at Madelia.

Madelia, Minn.—A train wreck occurred in the yards here. Freight train No. 18, eastbound, entered the yards with a broken brake, which had been dragging for some time; this caught in a frog and twelve cars were derailed. No one was hurt. The cars were thrown across the Fairmont track and traffic upon that line was blocked for several hours. A wrecking crew soon had the track cleared and traffic was resumed.

Fatal Accident.

Jamestown, N. D.—Rasmussen Knudson met with a fatal accident while hauling a load of lumber to his claim, three miles from Melville. The road was exceedingly rough, and on striking a heavy rut Knudson was jolted from the wagon, breaking his neck.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

ORDEAL THROUGH WHICH THE ENGAGED ONES PASSED.

LIKE A COUNTRY WEDDING

Orientals Enthusiastic Over American Soldiers and Their Fine Mounts—Pretty Little Incident in the House.

WASHINGTON. — It will take Washington a long time to recover from the Longworth-Roosevelt wedding. For days and weeks before that happy event little else was discussed or thought of in social circles. It had been the subject of constant remark that the two principals in this great event conducted themselves so modestly and in a matter of fact manner. They were subject to more scrutiny than would have been an engaged couple in a country village, but they acted as though unconscious of the interest they were exciting. Just as in the village the gossips discussed every move, word and act of the prospective bride and groom so in Washington the every day life of Mr. Longworth and Miss Roosevelt was examined and every step taken criticised or commented upon.

Mr. Longworth was perhaps the most bored person in connection with the whole affair. He had to pay the punishment of falling in love with the president's daughter. That he was really and truly in love with her there could be no sort of doubt and so he endured the jokes and chaffing of his congressional colleagues, the intrusion and impudence of the public as bravely and good naturedly as ever did knight of old as he went out seeking adventures for his lady love. At first the blushes would spread over "Nick's" countenance and suffuse the shining baldness of his head, but as time wore on he could even occupy the speaker's chair and encounter the glances and curious stares from the galleries and the floor without so much as an additional tinge of color to his cheek.

Miss Roosevelt, now Mrs. Longworth, did not change one iota in her demanor or manner of life. She took the affair as a matter of course and she inherits from her father the faculty of not worrying about anything, but meeting the circumstances and necessities as they come.

No Imperialistic Function.

THE wedding of Miss Roosevelt and Mr. Longworth while heralded far and wide as a gorgeous function and denounced by some backwoods ministers as aping royal marriages, was as simple and informal as anything in the White House possibly could be. Of course there were representatives of all the big governments in the world present, but that did not prevent young Mrs. Longworth acting in the most homely, democratic manner and receiving her friends with a jolly handshake and genial smile and then to gladden the hearts of the whole corps of White House servants by having them come up into the east room and offer their congratulations. This was a genuine touch of home life that at once dissipated any thought of an imperialistic function.

There was a jolly time at the breakfast table and after the ladies had retired Longworth and his Harvard friends sang college songs and joked with each other and had the president in to join in the merriment. It was more like a good, wholesome country wedding where everybody was happy and having a good time. Then the good old tradition of sending luck after the bride and groom as they drove away by casting old shoes and slippers and hands full of rice after them was followed in the merriest fashion. Miss Ethel, Kermit, Archie and Quentin with several of their girl and boy friends ran after the automobile containing the newly married couple laughing and shouting.

Even the old fashioned serenade or charivari was not neglected, although the serenaders reached the country house where the young couple passed the night rather late and had an encounter with a policeman. They brought a band of musicians and insisted on playing discordant airs intermingled with an occasional piece of classical music. Longworth recognized their appearance, addressed them briefly and they retired.

The Chinese at the Capital.

WHEN the imperial Chinese commission was in Washington a short time ago one of the greatest treats to them was an exhibition of horseback riding by men of the Thirteenth cavalry stationed at Fort Meyer. The wonderful performances of these soldiers on their handsome black steeds excited the Chinese out of their customary stolidity, until they clapped their hands like children almost and shouted "Cho ging, Cho ging, Cho ging."

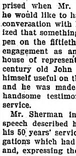
Sir Chenglung Liang Cceng, the Chinese minister, explained to the officers of the regiment that this was the Chinese way of declaring "That's great, That's great, That's great." The Chinese were lost in admiration at the fine looking American soldiers and their large, handsome mounts. These men of the Thirteenth have more skill than the favorite riders of the Buffalo Bill show and a more soldierly bearing than is exhibited by the picked men of the different armies of Europe. One of the commissioners asked: "Is this troop especially drilled for exhibitions?"

"It is simply one of many troops," was the reply. "One drill day we have out a certain troop, on another occasion we have another troop and so on."

Among the visitors was K. S. Yao, a brigadier general in the Chinese army. He was transfixed with admiration of the evolutions of the soldiers and when the latter came out the second time in blue uniforms instead of the khaki which they had been wearing, he exclaimed: "These horses are finer than the others, and the men, it seems."

He was informed they were the same men, but was incredulous. "Yes, they have made what we Americans call a 'lightning change' of uniform," he was informed and was then satisfied.

Half a Century of Service.



A VERY interesting little ceremony took place at the capitol the other day just after the adjournment of the house. John Chancey, a special officer of the house, was preparing to go home when Representative Sherman, of New York, followed by practically all of the members of the house present, approached him. Chancey was very much astonished and looked very much surprised when Mr. Sherman said that he would like to have a few moments' conversation with him. Then he realized that something was going to happen on the fiftieth anniversary of his engagement as an employe of the house of representatives. For half a century old John Chancey has made himself useful on the floor of the house and he was made the recipient of a handsome testimonial to his long service.

Mr. Sherman in an eloquent little speech described how Mr. Chancey in his 50 years' service had met the obligations which had devolved upon him and, expressing the best wishes of the members of the house and wishing the veteran and his family all happiness and prosperity, he placed in the hands of the embarrassed employe 20 crisp, one hundred dollar bills. The old man was overcome for in that $2,000 he saw disappear from his little home a mortgage of $1,500 and a balance of $500 left with which to celebrate the occasion. He did not attempt to reply at length, but in a faltering voice he declared: "Gentlemen, I thank you all. That is all I can do or say."

John Chancey was appointed to a position in the house in 1856 by Nathaniel P. Banks, of Massachusetts, afterwards speaker of the house and a distinguished major general in the union army in the civil war.

OLD TOMBS UNCOVERED.

During excavations in the neighborhood of Breslau, German Silesia, there have been discovered in the last few weeks nearly 500 tombs, with altogether 6,000 skulls and 200 dwelling caves. The oldest tombs date back about 2,500 years. They contained well-preserved skeletons, jars, cups and war hatchets of stone. Other tombs, so-called urn tombs, are about 1,000 years younger, and contain urns, pots, dishes, cups and goblets, as many as 20 vessels being found in a single tomb.

About the next move that will be made by the people liveing up this way, after we get the boat matter disposed of, will be to get a telephone line through this part of the country. This is not such a monstrous propisition as some of the big telephone companys would have us believe, as the farmers in other parts of state and in Dakota have put them in and found them to be a a good paying investment.

CARR SUGGESTS.

Sam Johnson and Mrs. Clara Dixon, the twain of notables who were recently arrested in Thief River Falls for unlawful cohabitation, and who commenced suit against the officers who arrested them, claiming twenty-five hundred dollars damage, were arrested this week at Plummer on a similar charge. We would suggest that the couple go to High landing, Red Lake Falls, or some other out-of-the-way place, where their peace will not be disturbed by officers of the law.—Thief River Press.

The above shows to what low depths some of the Thief River Falls editors have sank. To try to drag innocent settlers on this reservation into a county seat row, however the people can consider that the above was published in a paper whose editor was removed from the county attorneyship of Marshall county by the governor, and had to settle some place on gods footstole, after he was driven out of Marshall county, and we suppose he decided to locate at his preasent location. We extend our sympathy to the people who have to endure his preasents in their midst, until they can get rid of him as they did in Marshall county.

The Thief River Falls News makes sport of the fact that a poultry association has been organized here, and waxes very funny in last week's paper in regard to it. Of course had the promoters of our association given the matter a second thought they might have known that it would be necessary to get the sanction of Dictator Eastman before they could hope to make a success of the enterprise—but as long as they neglected to do so they will have to try and worry along without his support. The Red Lake Falls people will content themselves with raising "hens," John, and believe that in the long run they will come better than if they raised nothing but—well, the same as the up river bunch have done the past year.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

On the Christmas Tree.

The old fashioned stockings and hearts and crosses and animals cut out of tarlatan outlined with worsted and then filled with flat candles and tied on the tree are always popular ornaments. Sugar figures bought in the confectionery store will serve to break the monotony. The baker at Christmas time usually has his windows filled with horses, dogs, cats and men and women made of delectable cake dough and artistically ornamented with colored sugar curlycues. These are toothsome and attractive to the small boy and girl.

Candles in small candle holders are always scattered well over the tree. It is a wise precaution to keep a pan of water in which is a wet sponge in case of accidents. When a spark falls upon a bough, the sponge quickly applied to the spot will check the spread of the fire.—Washington Star.

The Frosted Hand.

"Sort of cold wave, wasn't it?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

HELD UP A RAILWAY CAR

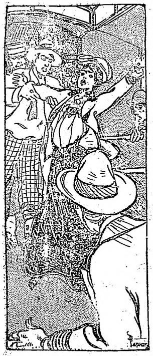
Crazy Woman With Revolver Created Terror on a Train.

Mrs. Sarah Berry, the crazy woman who, armed with a revolver, had held possession of a passenger car at Girard, Kan., denying herself every comfort and threatening to kill the person who attempted to molest her, was captured after a fierce struggle. The capture was made by Sheriff Walsh and his men after Mrs. Berry had been overcome by ammonia poured upon her from the transom of the room where she remained a prisoner for more than 100 hours. The fumes of the powerful drug almost blinded the woman and rendered her temporarily insensible.

When Detective Monohan climbed to the transom window and poured the ammonia upon her Mrs. Berry answered with a shot from her revolver. The bullet lodged in the roof of the car. At the same instant W. L. Petty, a muscular farmer, threw himself against the door of the room and forced it open. Behind Petty were William Osborne and his son Thomas and Sheriff Walsh. Mrs. Berry began to scream frantically.

"You are trying to kill me!" she yelled as Petty grabbed her by the right arm and dragged her toward the door. A moment later she fell to the floor. The officers helped her to her feet, and, recovering partially from her stupor, she began a fierce struggle with her captors.

"You are not my friends!" she cried again and again. The revolver was taken from the folds of her dress. It contained only one cartridge. No other weapon or ammunition was found on her. After a contest lasting probably five minutes, in which Mrs. Berry exhibited almost superhuman strength, she was subdued.



"YOU ARE TRYING TO KILL ME!" SHE YELLED.

She was lifted into a buggy by Detective Monohan and the sheriff and taken to the jail. There restoratives were administered.

Mrs. Berry's eyes were terribly swollen and her throat scarred by the ammonia fumes; but her mental torture was greater than the physical sufferings she endured. She imagined the officers intended to kill her. Her hair hung loosely about her face and shoulders. There was a deep red imprint on her cheeks, showing the finger marks of one of the attacking party. A doctor said her physical condition was not serious. While the doctor was sponging her face with a lotion she sobbed pitifully.

Probably fifty persons witnessed the capture. While the struggle was in progress the crowd became greatly excited. It was feared that Mrs. Berry was heavily armed, that at least she had more than one revolver and was likely to give a desperate battle. Not until she was taken to the jail did the citizens feel entirely relieved.

Disappointment on Both Sides.

"You said the house was only five minutes' walk from the station," complained the victim. "To say the least, I'm disappointed in you."

"And I'm disappointed in you," replied the agent. "I thought you were a very rapid walker."—Philadelphia Press.

Forests and National Prosperity.

As a living example of the consequences of deforestation we need simply look to Spain, a country which centuries ago was rich in timber and agricultural products, a proud seafaring nation of world conquerors. Spain's decadence dates from the time when her timber supply became exhausted, her shipbuilding relaxed and her barren, unprotected soil ceased to bear fruit.—Forum.

For a Shave de Luxe.

"Let me give you a tip for which I think you will be grateful," said a local barber in one of the downtown shops the other day. "Always maintain a pleasant feeling and a slight smile if possible when in a barber's chair for the purpose of being shaved. When the face is in a smile and the muscles are relaxed it is very much easier for the barber to run over it with a razor. This is especially applicable to persons who have a tough and wiry beard."—Washington Star.

Oddly Marked Tombstone.

In an old graveyard in Maine the monument to the founder of a distinguished family is marked with the outline of a human leg. It is formed by black streaks in the granite running through the stone, for at the back there is another leg, but much smaller in dimensions. Nobody saw this blemish when the stone was set up. Not until years had passed did any one notice it. People concluded that the stonecutters, not wishing to go to the expense of quarrying out another block, so hid the leg with cement and stone dust that the actions of the storms of a dozen winters were necessary to expose the strangely formed disfigurement.

"Dew Ponds."

Among the most singular archaeological remains found in Great Britain are the ancient "dew ponds," the construction of which is ascribed to people of the Neolithic age. The purpose of these ponds was to furnish drinking water for cattle. An exposed position, where springs were absent, was selected, and a broad, hollowed surface was formed and covered over with straw or some other nonconducting material. Above was spread a thick layer of clay strewn with stones. During the night the cold surface of the clay caused an abundance of moisture to condense from the lower layers of the air. Some of these ancient dew ponds are still in working order.

Laugh and Live Long.

It has been aptly said that there is not the remotest corner of the inlet of the minute blood vessels of the human body that does not feel some wavelet from the convulsions occasioned by good hearty laughter. The life principle of the central man is shaken to its innermost depths, sending new tides of life and strength to the surface, thus materially tending to insure good health to the persons who indulge therein. The blood moves more rapidly and conveys a different impression to all the organs of the body as it visits them on that particular mystic journey when the man is laughing from that conveyed at other times. For this reason every good, hearty laugh in which a person indulges tends to lengthen his life, conveying as it does new and distinct stimulus to the vital forces.

Mrs Thomas Sullivan left for Grand Forks yesterday to consult Dr. Engstad, about a lump that started to grow on her left breast, which Mr. Sullivan said had such a searious appearence that they thought it best to consult a doctor.

Thor Torkelson, who is one of the Deer Park farmers, who is taking an active interest in the the building of a bridge across the Clearwater river at the Robinson place, by subscription, was a caller here Wednesday. He reports that the bridge will be compleated by the time the ice goes out of the river. Of course we dug up $10.00. How much did Carr and Estman give? 0, of course, but they could publish your land notices all right and take the money down to Thief River Falls to make improvements.

The following Township ticket was elected in Deer Park township at Tuesdays election. Supervisor. A. Brovold. Clerk, W. A. Swanson. Assessor, J. O. Swanson. Treasurer, Osmond Mandt. Justice of the peace, Henry Sirosberg, Louis Lund Constable's, Ed. ustad, Chas Erickson. Sup. of schools, Stephen Singer. 37 votes were cast. There was no special intrest take in the election by the farmers, as there was no strife for office.

Tuesdays election was not as largely attended as it would have been, if there had not been a blizzard on tap, with no strife for office. 55 votes were cast and the following Township ticket elected: Supervisor, G. O. Gulrud. Town Clerk, J. W. Vrolson. Treasurer, Andrew T. Nelson, Assessor, P. C. Wolde. Justice's the peace, Alex Lattimore, W. G Hunt. Constables Frank Zavoral. Herman Halvorson. All road districts elected their road overseers for the coming year, and a resolution passed against the township buying any expensive road graders or ditchers this season.

The following ticket was elected as Village officers at Plummer last Tuesday. Mayor, H. H. Finrow. Councilmen, John A. Rothsteen, E. B. Lanager, Henry Granum, Clerk, Ole Johnson, Treasurer, H. J. Enderle. Justice of the peace, Ole J. Johnson. Assessor, Erik Iverson, Constable, Percy Taggart. We extend our congratulations to them all as the winning ticket was printed at THE SUNBEAM office.

THE BOAT MEETING.

The boat meeting at Kratka on last Saturday was well attended by the farmers living along the river, and an active interest taken in forming a company to build a boat to run on the river this season. A Committee was appointed to get the articles of incorperation and by laws drawn up, and an other Committee to take shares in the company. An other meeting of all the share holders will be called as soon as the articles of incorperaton are drawn, in the meantime do all you can to help the committee to get stock in the compa ny and when you have taken at least one or two shares yourself, go with them to your neighbor and try to get him to take a share or two, for you must remember that this is an importent matter to the farmers of this locality.

Little Soap Used In India.

English firms are trying to secure a market for soap in India, but up to the present time that country has remained practically soapless Indeed, throughout Hindustan soap is regarded as rather a curiosity, and rarely, if ever, kept in stock by the native storekeeper.

MRS. JACK LONDON.

She Is the Novelist's Second Wife. "The Kempton-Wace Letters."

Jack London, author and Socialist, who is now lecturing on "The Coming Crisis," is for a second time a bridegroom, and his new wife is a charming young woman, whose name before her marriage to the writer and lecturer was Miss Charmion Kittredge. His first wife, who was Miss Elizabeth Madden, is still living, but when a book entitled "The Kempton-Wace Letters" appeared and she learned that her husband was one of its authors she separated from him. The book was written by the author of "The Call of the Wild" in collaboration with a young Russian Jewess, Miss Anna Strunsky, a student at Stanford university and an advocate of Socialism, for whom Mr. London cherished a platonic friendship.

MRS. JACK LONDON.

Mrs. London did not like either the sentiments of the book or her husband's friendship for Miss Strunsky and in August, 1904, secured a divorce from him in California on the ground of willful desertion. Last November Mr. London married Miss Kittredge, who is a magazine writer and a daughter of the late Captain Willard Kittredge, U. S. A., one time editor of the Overland Monthly, which accepted London's first Klondike story.

TWO WINSTON CHURCHILLS.

One an American, the Other an Englishman—Both Authors.

There is much interest in literary circles over the announcement that the Macmillans have paid to Winston Churchill for the biography of his father the largest sum ever given by a publishing firm for a work of the kind. The author got $40,000 down, with the agreement that half the profits should come to him after the publishers have made $20,000 from it. Churchill is being paid at even a higher rate than John Morley was for his life of Gladstone.

Some people may suppose that this is the same Winston Churchill who wrote "Richard Carvel," "The Crisis" and "The Crossing," but it is not. He is an altogether different individual.

COPYRIGHT 1900 BY

THE AMERICAN WINSTON CHURCHILL AND THE ENGLISH WINSTON CHURCHILL.

The name Churchill is not an uncommon name, but "Winston" is, and it is a singular coincidence that two men bearing these names and not kinsmen should be prominent in literature. The coincidence is further emphasized by the fact that both are novelists and politicians, are young men and were trained in the arts of war, one being educated for the army, the other the navy. The Winston Churchill who has just written a biography of his father is an Englishman, the third son of the late Lord Randolph Churchill, and his full name is Winston Lionel Spencer Churchill. The author of "Richard Carvel" is an American. The Englishman is a member of parliament, was born in 1874, has served in four wars as war correspondent for London papers, had a marvelous escape from a Boer prison in the South African war, inherited $20,000,000 from an uncle and is now winning fame as an orator in the house of commons. His mother, who after the death of Lord Randolph Churchill married George Cornwallis West, is the daughter of the late Leonard Jerome of New York.

The American Winston Churchill was born in St. Louis in 1871, graduated from the Naval academy at Annapolis and for a time served in the navy, has been an editor and has served in the New Hampshire legislature. He has an artistic home at Cornish, N. H.

Diet and Digestion.

Abstemiousness in diet is very conducive to a good digestion. It is preferable to be a little underfed than at all overfed. Hence we come to one of the first causes of indigestion in the adult, too large a quantity of food. After an ordinary meal the food should all have left the stomach by the end of six or seven hours. If owing to an excessive quantity the stomach cannot deal with the amount some food remains in the stomach and ferments. This creates discomfort, pain, wind, nausea and perhaps vomiting, by means of which the abused stomach gets rid of its burden. If the sufferer is not thus fortunately sick the best thing he can do is to drink a large tumbler of lukewarm water, which will probably induce vomiting and so wash out the stomach. Half a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda added to the fluid will cause still more relief. During the next twenty-four hours the lightest diet, such as a little tea and dried toast, some boiled rice, a little arrowroot or corn flour, should be taken.

Chotohazree at the Gymkhana.

In "Modern India" the author, William Eleroy Curtis, records his meeting with the word gymkhana and "ventures to say that nobody who has not been in India can guess what that means."

And if you want another conundrum, what is a chotohazree? It is customary for smart people to have their chotohazree at the gymkhana, and I think you would be pleased to join them after taking the beautiful drive which leads to the place. Nobody knows where the word was derived from; but it is used to describe a country club—a bungalow hidden under a beautiful grove on the brow of a cliff that overhangs the bay—with all of the appurtenances, golf links, cricket grounds, racket courts and indoor gymnasium, and everybody stops there on an afternoon drive to have chotohazree, which is the local term for afternoon tea and for early morning coffee.

Winding Your Watch.

The old superstitious belief that you will change your luck if you stop winding your watch at night and wind it in the morning may have some slight basis in fact, according to a jeweler, who says that the morning is the proper time to do the winding. This is not only because the hour of rising is for the average man much more regular than that for retiring, but even the soberest and most orderly of men are apt to relax and prone to carelessness at bedtime, when more or less worn by the wear and tear of the day. In this condition the winding is apt to be done in a jerky, irregular sort of way or too far or not far enough. "Nine people out of ten wind their watches on going to bed," said the jeweler, "but if they would do it when they get up, at some regular point in the process of making their toilet, they would do it much better."—Philadelphia Record.

Curious Almshouse.

The most curious almshouse in England is St. Mary's hospital at Chichester. There eight old ladies live actually in the church, which is a fine old building dating from 1680. It was originally a monastery, but when Queen Elizabeth came to visit there she turned it into an almshouse to endure as long as almshouses exist. The old ladies have two neat little rooms each down the sides of the main church, with windows looking out on the garden. They have each a coal supply, a kitchen range, water and gas. At one end of the church is the chapel, where daily services are held. The choir stalls are beautifully carved old oak, the original seats that the monks used. The church stands in a quiet little square.

Too Serious.

While a great many persons probably take themselves too seriously, entertaining an altogether exaggerated opinion of their ability and worth, not many nowadays go to the extreme length of the German whom the English poet Coleridge met at Frankfort. He always took off his hat when he ventured to speak of himself. Were this practice to become general what a number of people would be permanently bareheaded!

Boarding a Hansom.

Have you ever noticed the right way to get into a hansom when two people are riding? Few persons know what to do. In nine cases out of ten the one who enters first seats himself on the off side. But this is wrong. If, on getting in first, you take the near seat, your companion can then enter in ease and comfort, which otherwise he could not.

To Waterproof Canvas.

Scientific American gives this recipe for waterproofing for canvas: Soft soap dissolved in hot water and a solution of iron sulphate added. The sulphuric acid combines with the potash of the soap and the iron oxide is precipitated with the fatty acid as insoluble iron soap. This is washed and dried and mixed with linseed oil.

Masculine.

Mrs. Hix—Mrs. June strikes me as being entirely too masculine for a woman. Mrs. Dix—Yes, indeed. Why, every time she has an ache or a pain she makes as much fuss about it as a man would.

Discretion.

First Lawyer—It seems to me you let that last witness down pretty easily in your cross examination. Second Lawyer—I had to. He is my tailor, and I owe him a big bill.

When a man says, "Of course it's no business of mine," it is a sure sign that he is going to do the best he can to make it his business.

The Fall of the Hennins.

The hennins or headdresses worn by ladies of the fifteenth century were in shape of horns and so long that a woman's face appeared to be in the center of her figure. The clergy condemned them and threatened the wearers with perdition, but for all that they were worn higher than ever. At last a strolling evangelist at Paris promised absolution to all who would destroy the hennins, and the mob went to work and wrecked the headdresses whenever they appeared in public. The hennins were trampled under foot and their wearers insulted all over Paris. Scores of lives were lost in the efforts of the cavaliers to defend the hennins from the rabble, but in vain, and the enormous headdresses disappeared, some other feminine absurdity taking their place.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Educate Food Inspectors.

St. Paul—All the food inspectors of the state dairy and food department were called in to receive instructions on the enforcement of provisions of the new code. Commissioner E. K. Slater told them that while they are to enforce the law without fear or favor, the department does not aim to impose any unnecessary hardship on the retailers. The department is for education rather than punishment and the inspectors will devote their time as much to instructing grocers in the provisions of the law as in spying out violations. Retailers will be given an opportunity to obey the law before they are arrested.

In the case of baking powders, for instance where the new law makes a change in the requirements, many brands which may be illegal under the new code would be legal under a different label. The department will give the grocers a chance to change the labels to comply with the provisions of the law. In many cases this can be done by scratching out some of the fancy adjectives attached to the names of the ingredients.

The law prohibiting the use of coal tar dyes, terra alba, barytos and paraffin in candies must be strictly enforced, Mr. Slater told his inspectors. Retailers who have a large stock of candies made illegal by the code will have a chance to destroy or return them before they will be prosecuted, but should they continue selling them they will incur the danger of a fine.

School Apportionment.

A total of $637,991.30 will be apportioned among the state schools this spring as against $547,655 a year ago, according to the figures filed with the state auditor by State Supt. Olsen. The money available for this purpose is apportioned twice a year, and the apportionment per pupil this spring will be $1.70, as against $1.50 a year ago. Last fall there was distributed $2.30 per child, and in October, 1904, $2.20 per child, so the apportionment per child has increased from $3.70 to $4.

The apportionment is based upon the number of children attending forty days or more during the last school year, so each county will be paid for the same number of children now as last fall. There are 375,298 children on the list, and a year ago there were 365,090 pupils entitled to share in the state's distribution of money.

Ask for Later Date.

Representatives of local parochial schools and of the forestry committee of the State Federation of Women's Clubs called on Gov. Johnson and asked that the date for Arbor day be fixed a little later this year than in past years. It is understood that the governor and the state superintendent of schools had agreed upon April 21 for Arbor day this year, but the local women thought this would be too early, as trees planted that date would be liable to suffer from spring frosts. They quoted Prof. S. B. Green of the state farm school on the subject of frosts and the time for planting trees.

Gov. Johnson could not give them any definite promise, and told them the date had not been definitely decided. No matter what date is fixed it cannot please all, for the time for planting trees is different in different parts of the state and also varies with different years.

Looking for Violators of Law

Brainerd—State Auditor Iverson has the state cruisers looking for violators of the laws against trespass on state lands, and one of them, State Cruiser Elliott, has seized 11,000 posts at Mildred station, which had been purchased by a lumber company from settlers, who, it is claimed, had cut them illegally from state lands. It is understood that the state authorities will bring action for treble damages.

Two carloads of logs have been seized at Hackensack, which were alleged to have been cut from state lands by farmers. It is said that other seizures will be made within a few days.

Monument to Warren.

Little Falls—N. Richardson of this place announces that on June 1 of this year he will unveil a monument to the memory of William Whipple Warren, one of the pioneer missionaries to the Ojibway Indians, who died on June 1, 1853. The monument will consist of a properly marked stone, to be erected on the site of Mr. Warren's home at Two Rivers, Minn. It is expected to have appropriate ceremonies mark the unveiling. Mr. Warren was born at La Pointe, Wis., in 1825, settling at Two Rivers, Minn., in 1850. In 1852 he wrote his celebrated "History of the Ojibways," which ever since has been a standard authority. He died of a hemorrhage in 1853 and was buried in St. Paul.

Equip College Battalion.

St. Peter—A consignment of Springfield rifles, with belts and other accoutrements, has been received at Gustavus Adolphus college. The arms were shipped by Adjt. Gen. F. B. Wood and are supplied by the state to equip a cadet corps at the school.

The battalion was organized last September and the military instructor is A. T. Lagerstrom, formerly captain of one of the cadet companies of the University of Minnesota.

News in Brief.

Brainerd.—A naval recruiting office will be established here.

Minneapolis.—The Northwestern Fire and Marine Insurance company of Minneapolis was incorporated with the secretary of state, the first insurance company to file under the provisions of the new code.

St. Paul.—The directors of the public library voted to add to the library printed copies of the official report of the joint committee of the New York senate and assembly appointed to investigate the life insurance companies doing business in New York, known as the Armstrong committee.

Minneapolis.—Prince Tsai Tseh, cousin of the emperor of China, and the other distinguished members of the imperial Chinese commission, passed through the Twin Cities.

Washington.—Representative McCleary of Minnesota is preparing for a series of tariff speeches during this session of congress.

SHOULD A HORSE BE CLIPPED?

CLIPPING IN THE EARLY SPRING RECOMMENDED BY LEADING VETERINARIANS.

All Thinking Men Readily Recognize Its Advantages.

"A horse is a valuable asset, and should receive the best care possible. He should be well fed, comfortably stabled, carefully groomed and clipped in the early spring. If he receives these attentions he will work well and improve in value. A horse lives under artificial conditions. In his wild state he required none of these attentions, for he was able to look out for himself. The domesticated animal, being worked under conditions that are in themselves artificial, must be kept in condition for such work.

"The clipping of a horse in the early spring is now conceded by all the leading veterinarians to be as essential to a horse's well being as shoeing him or giving him a comfortable bed to lie on. Farmers in England and France have been clipping their horses for many years, and American farmers are not slow to realize its advantages. A clipped horse dries out rapidly after a hard day's work, and will rest comfortably and be refreshed for the work the following day. An unclipped horse is liable to catch the heaves, pneumonia and all sorts of colds, rheumatism, etc. More especially is this so in the early spring, when his hair is long and he is "soft." If worked hard he will perspire freely and the moisture will be held by his long hair, and the food that should go to nourish him will be used to replenish the heat that is being constantly taken from his body by the mass of cold wet hair. If clipped, the perspiration will evaporate almost as soon as secreted, and when put in the stable he rests comfortably and his food does him good.

Some years ago a Buffalo street car company tested the value of clipping in the following manner: They owned 500 horses, and 250 of these were clipped early in the spring and 250 were not clipped. A careful record was kept of results, and it was found that of the 250 unclipped horses 153 were afflicted with coughs and pneumonia, while of the 250 clipped not one case of sickness was reported.

A man would not expect to enjoy very good health if he did hard manual work clothed with heavy underwear, a heavy suit and a fur overcoat, and after perspiring freely, as he naturally would, go to sleep without removing same. It is just as ridiculous to expect a horse to be in perfect health if worked under the same conditions.

If you would get the best returns from your investment in your horse, treat him right, and be sure and clip him in the early spring. A first-class horse-clipping machine can be bought at almost any hardware store for less than $7.00.—Horse Review, Dec. 5th, 1905.

BABY'S TORTURING HUMOR,

Ears Looked as If They Would Drop Off—Face Mass of Sores—Cured by Cuticura in Two Weeks for 75c.

"I feel it my duty to parents of other poor suffering babies to tell you what Cuticura has done for my little daughter. She broke out all over her body with a humor, and we used everything recommended, but without results. I called in three doctors, they all claimed they could help her, but she continued to grow worse. Her body was a mass of sores, and her little face was being eaten away; her ears looked as if they would drop off. Neighbors advised me to get Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and before I had used half of the cake of Soap and box of Ointment the sores had all healed, and my little one's face and body were as clear as a new-born babe's. I would not be without it again if it cost five dollars, instead of seventy-five cents. Mrs. George J. Steese, 701 Coburn St., Akron, Ohio."

HERITAGE OF CIVIL WAR.

Thousands of Soldiers Contracted Chronic Kidney Trouble While in the Service.

The experience of Capt. John L. Ely, of Co. E, 17th Ohio, now living at 500 East Second Street, Newton, Kansas, will interest the thousands of veterans who came back from the Civil War suffering tortures with kidney complaint. Capt. Ely says: "I contracted kidney trouble during the Civil War, and the occasional attacks finally developed into a chronic case. At one time I had to use a crutch and cane to get about. My back was lame and weak, and besides the aching, there was a distressing retention of the kidney secretions. I was in a bad way when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills in 1901, but the remedy cured me, and I have been well ever since."

WASHINGTON LETTER

TILLMAN IN CHARGE OF RAILWAY RATE LEGISLATION.

BECOME VERY PROMINENT

Senator Knox Popular with Both Parties—Senator Bailey a Fine Constitutional Lawyer—This a Young Man's Administration.

WASHINGTON.—Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, has had unexpected honors thrust upon him. He has been put in charge of the railroad rate bill in the senate and occupies the anamalous position of managing an administration measure while personally being the bitterest enemy President Roosevelt has in congress. The senator has accepted the responsibility and proposes to show friends and foes alike that he can rise to the occasion and conduct himself calmly and conservatively. He has declared that if anyone expects to see him make a clown of himself on the floor of the senate that person will be very much disappointed.

It is absolutely amusing to see this fire-eating senator from South Carolina visiting the Republican side, getting counsel and advice as to how he shall conduct the fight for this great economic measure.

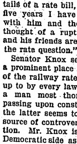
As a result of circumstances Mr. Tillman has this winter come into more prominence than any other man in congress. He added to his notoriety by making one of the most bitter attacks on President Roosevelt that has ever been heard in the senate. He attacked the president's policies and sneered at his personality and yet today he is the champion of Mr. Roosevelt's principal policy, that of regulating freight rates. Then Mr. Tillman gained additional notoriety by his joint resolution calling for an investigation of the coal and oil carrying railroads and on top of all this he is put in the limelight by having charge of railway rate legislation in the senate.

The President and His Friends.

THERE have been many stories about the president falling out with a number of his old friends on the rate question. There has been some pretty plain talk on the part of the president and on the part of his friends with whom he differs about each other, but there is no evidence of a rupture. Senator Knox, of Pennsylvania, is one of those who has been represented as breaking with the president, but he expresses the views of himself and other senators on this point when he says: "The talk of my breaking with the president is all rot. We may differ as to some of the details of a rate bill, but during the past five years I have frequently differed with him and there never was any thought of a rupture. The president and his friends are not so far apart on the rate question."

Senator Knox seems bound to take a prominent place in the consideration of the railway rate bill as he is looked up to by every lawyer in the senate as a man most thoroughly capable of passing upon constitutional points and the latter seems to be really the only source of controversy in the rate question. Mr. Knox is as popular on the Democratic side as among his Republican colleagues and it is a daily sight on the floor of the senate to see him and Senator Bailey, of Texas, the Democratic leader and a fine constitutional lawyer, in earnest conference discussing some legal phase of the bill. Mr. Bailey says he regards Mr. Knox as one of the greatest lawyers in the United States.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.



ANOTHER young man has come to the front in the public service and seems to have entered the path already trodden by several young men which has led to high achievement and success. John B. Edwards, secretary to Secretary of the Treasury Shaw, is the fortunate youth who has been shunted along the royal road to success. He has been appointed assistant secretary of the treasury to succeed Governor "Hod" Taylor, who will retire in a few months. "Jack" Edwards as he is familiarly known, is one of the popular young men in the government service who wins his way by natural ability and by his geniality and suavity of manner. He is only 31 years of age and has only been in Washington for nine years.

If he follows the footsteps of his predecessors Mr. Vanderlip, Mr. Ailes and Mr. Armstrong, all of whom were in turn secretaries to the secretary of the treasury and then assistant secretaries of the treasury, Edwards will land in some high, profitable position in the financial field outside of the government service. Mr. Vanderlip is vice president of the National City bank of New York and one of the big men in the country's finances. Ailes is the vice president of the Riggs National bank of this city and Armstrong is president of the Casualty Company of America.

All of these young men made good in whatever position they occupied in the government service and attracted the attention of corporations and business men in the outside world. There is no doubt that "Jack" Edwards will receive the same attention because men who enjoy the confidence of the president of the United States and the secretary of the treasury have about all the capital that is necessary for success in outside business.

Likes Young Men.

THIS is a young man's administration. Theodore Roosevelt believes in young men and where all things are equal he selects men under 40 for responsible work. He has confidence in the energy and optimism of youth and some of his most intimate counsellors and associates are men on the sunny side of 40. He has a band of young fellows who are known as the "Tennis club" because most of the members are experts in the game which furnishes the president so much healthful recreation. Young Garfield, head of the bureau of corporations, Pinchot, the head of the bureau of forestry, Cooley, civil service commissioner, Bacon, first assistant secretary of state are some of the members of this club who not only contribute to the president's outdoor enjoyment, but who are close in his confidence on most matters of statescraft.

There might be mentioned in this corps of youngsters Murray, assistant secretary of the department of commerce and labor, Hitchcock, first assistant postmaster general, Keep and Reynolds, assistant secretaries of the treasury. Mr. Reynolds was appointed directly from private life to the position which he now holds, but the president had full knowledge of his capacity. Reynolds enjoyed the friendship of Senator W. Murray Crane, of Massachusetts, who advised the president to appoint him to an assistant secretaryship of the treasury.

The Silver Dollar.

IT is a remarkable fact that in the year 1905 not a single silver dollar was coined by the United States mint. This is the first time such a thing has happened since 1839. There was not even a single pattern piece of this denomination struck off at the mint, although coin collectors urged Director Roberts of the mint at least to issue proof pieces so that their series of coins would not be broken. He declined all such requests.

The silver dollar took the place of the old Spanish "piece of eight," which had general circulation in the colonies and states before the opening of the mint in 1792. The coinage of silver dollars began in 1749 and they were issued each year continuously for ten years and then discontinued. Their coinage was resumed in 1839 and they have appeared each year from that up to 1905 in which year not a single dollar was struck off.

The most valuable dollar in the series of silver dollars is one of 1794. One of that mintage in good condition is worth $240, while as high as $510 has been paid for a specimen that was never in circulation. This dollar bore the design of a liberty head with flowing hair. Above the head was the word "Liberty" surrounded by 15 stars. In two years the total number of dollars of this design circulated was 204,791. In 1804 the last year in which these dollars were coined, about 19,000 were minted. The dollar of that date is regarded as the most famous of all, as they are very scarce. The reason assigned for their scarcity is that silver dollars were used in those days to pay off the men in the navy and nearly all the coins made by the mint that year were sent to Tripoli to pay the soldiers and sailors engaged in the Tripolitan war. The theory is that few of the coins ever found their way back to this country.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Cattle at the Fair.

Hamline—Massive, white-faced Hereford cattle will again be greatly in evidence at the Minnesota State Fair this year. Secretary E. W. Randall is home from a trip to Kansas City where he met with the board of directors of the American Hereford Cattle Breeders' Association and received their agreement to contribute to the premiums offered for cattle at the state fair of 1906.

The Herefords have been prominent at the Minnesota fairs for several years and many of them have found their way to the Minnesota farms where they are now heads of improved herds which are helping to build up the prosperity of Minnesota farmers. There will be a big exhibit again this year with, it is expected, the usual good results for exhibitors and the agricultural public. The association appropriated $500 for the premiums and this will be duplicated by the State Agricultural Society so that $1,000 will be given in premiums for this class of cattle alone.

Wants a Change.

Crookston—State Engineer George Ralph has written to Congressman Steenerson suggesting an amendment to the homestead laws which he believes will prove especially beneficial to this section of the state. The amendment proposes that where government land is swampy and in need of reclamation, that the federal government pay the expenses of drainage and that such expenses be a lien against the land until paid for by the person taking the claim. The payments are to be in small installments, so that no hardship would be worked on the homesteader. By such an amendment, Mr. Ralph believes the land which at present is of little value, can be thrown open quickly to settlement and instead of being a dead weight to the government, would be a source of revenue.

Filed After Fifty Years.

St. Cloud—There is an interesting story back of the patent for the townsite of South Bend, Minn., which has just been received at the local land office. The land was paid for at the Winona land office June 30, 1855, more than half a century ago.

The patent is in the name of Andrew G. Chatfield, territorial judge, long since dead, who made the entry in trust for the townsite. The patent covers 286.90 acres and the price paid was $1.25 an acre, or a total of $358.62.

The townsite is three miles west of Mankato, and the town, it is said, was intended to have been a rival to that place. If its founders had such aspirations, they probably have long since this vanished. South Bend used to have a postoffice, but even that has been taken away and the few inhabitants get their mail by rural delivery.

Will Sue for Taxes.

St. Paul—When the attorney general's department brings suit against the Great Western to collect the 4 per cent tax for 1905, it will also sue for an additional 1 per cent on the gross earnings for every year from 1896 to 1904 inclusive. The road has never paid more than 2 per cent on its main line, and the state contends that it should have paid 3 per cent under the general law.

The amount involved will be over $100,000, and would be larger if the state could go back farther than 1896. The statute of limitations used to run against the state in collection of taxes, outlawing everything over 6 years old. In 1902 the legislature abolished it, so everything from 1896 down can be reached. The 1902 law may be challenged, however, because the title makes it apply only to real estate taxes, and railroads are in part personal property.

Large Power.

Washington, D. C.—First steps were taken at the war department looking to the utilization of the surplus water power that will be produced on the completion of government locks and dams between Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Congressman F. C. Stevens of St. Paul, who has been working out a plan, conferred with Secretary Taft and General Mackenzie, chief of engineers, relative to this great project which eventually will mean much to the United States government and the Twin Cities.

General Mackenzie is much interested in our proposition for utilizing the surplus water, which will flow over the dams now in process of construction between the Twin Cities. If this power can be used for lighting and heating federal buildings in the cities and the big army post buildings and barracks at Fort Snelling, it will be a very great saving to the government.

News in Brief.

St. Peter.—At their annual meeting the board of directors of Gustavus Adolphus college voted to send out a quartet and an entertainer to tour the state in the interests of the school and to interest new students in the institution.

Richland.—The contract for building the new creamery to take the place of the one burned a few weeks ago, has been awarded to T. P. Thompson and J. C. Nelson of this city. The new building will cost $5,000.

Minneapolis.—Ira Riddle, an aged sailor well known to the habitues of Bridge Square lodging house, is dead, and although he left $150 in his name at the Security bank, the city will have to bury him.

White Bear.—The ticket nominated by the caucus will have opposition. Another ticket has been put into the field, called the people's ticket.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Let us have an early repupli can convention, at Duluth, and an uninstructed delegation, from every county in the state.

It appears they had rather a warm election at Plummer the 13th, and that owing to broken promises our friend Latta, only landed the unlucky number of 13 votes for Village recorder. To bad Chas., but we understand the office of pound master in Deer Park Township is vacant, and if your bowels still yearn for office, we will use our influence to get you appointed, as we owe an everlasting debt of gratitude to the "trio", and we will further say Chas., that if THE SUNBEAM reccomends you for appointment you are sure to land the affice, as the 75 subscribers don't change. "For behold I am with you."

The Frazee Free Press pays the following deserved compliment to the Ninth district's able representative in congress, Hon. Halvor Steenerson: "When election comes around the voters of the ninth congressional district know what is best to be done in regard to electing their representative to congress. They know of a certainty that Hon. Halvor Steenerson has filled the place admariably well and has repre sented them in a manner well suited to their intrests and to elect some one els to take his place, just for the sake of an experiment would be detrimental. Mr. Steenerson has proven himself to be an abler man than the general everage of those who de vote their time to politics, has attended strictly to business and looked more closely after the intrests of his constituents than any of his prodecessors. He is the right man in the right place and has shown himself to be a friend of the common people and through his efforts home steads have been opened up and secured for them on a larger scale than ever before."—Thief River Falls News.

Here is the latest candidate of the Olberg Journal, who always has one or two candidates for every office, but the following one is certainly entitled to have his name on the slate, if it should be wiped off again next September.

"Andrew M. Johnson, one of Clearwater county's most popular and respected citizens, from Winsor, is being strongly urged by his numerous friends throughout the country to become a candidate for representative in the 61st district. If Mr. Johnson should decide to step before the people as a candidate there is no question but he will land the nomination and be elected with a rousing majority. Mr. Johnson will come before the people with a clean record, honest, independent, strong in mind, and with unlimited business qualities. Mr. Johnson is a true type of the strong, brainy, fearless men, possessing statesmanship which Northern Minnesota so sorely need in our next legislature. Mr. Johnson is a man fully aware of the wants of the people in gener al throughout the northern portion of our state, and in close touch with his district's need. In fact he is a man upon whom all may unite their support with pride and profit to our state as a whole."

Carr and Clark have sold the Thief River Falls Prsss to S. W. Bagley, a former owner. We understand that Clark will remain in Theif River Falls and practice law. We sympithize with his cli ents, as they don't know when they will get "let down."

It begins to look now as if the Republican party was going to have a candidate nominated for governor who had not been roasted to a crisp by his own party before the nomination In fact it begins to look as if the governor Johnson newspapers would not have any spicy editorials to copy from the republican papers, that were written before the nomination.

Judge John Day Smith, of the city of Minneapolis has been mentioned as a nominee of the republican party for governor, He would undoubtly make a good man for the position if he could get that idea out of his head, that he had when he was in the legislature, that the principal occupation of the farmers of the northern part of the state was raising wolves to get the bounty on them.

Franklin's Sawdust Pudding.

Franklin believed in fair competition, in freedom for others as well as himself and cared more for his personal independence in the conduct of his business than for the business itself. The story of the sawdust pudding should be known in every newspaper office in the country. When he first started the Gazette he made some free comments on certain public officials, and some of the influential patrons of the paper resented it and tried to stop it. He invited them to dinner. When they came they found nothing on the table but a pudding made of coarse meal and a jug of water. They sat down. Franklin filled their plates and then his own and proceeded to eat heartily, but his guests could not swallow the stuff. After a few moments Franklin rose and, looking at them, said quietly: "My friends, any man who can subsist on sawdust pudding, as I can, needs no man's patronage."—American Illustrated Magazine.

A Scheme and a Luncheon.

One of Balzac's wild schemes was a plan to combine Paris theaters. One morning in September, 1839—an early day to talk of monopoly—ten literary friends of the great novelist met by invitation at his house. Before luncheon Balzac told them of his scheme. His idea was to form a trust to buy up all the theaters as a sequel to a smaller preliminary trust for the supply of plays to every theater in Paris. The ten guests were to supply them. He estimated the profits of the first year at £120,000, and each year would, he thought, bring in more money. He expounded his scheme at length for over an hour, and finally one of the guests suggested that he might go on at table. The novelist started. "I forgot all about ordering anything to eat!" he cried, and late in the afternoon the members of the shadowy trust made a shadowy meal of bread and cheese and sour wine in a small country restaurant.

Great Writers Not Correct Writers.

There is not a single great author in our literature in whose works numerous errors have not been pointed out or thought to be pointed out. They are charged with violating rules involving the purity if not the permanence of the language. A somewhat depressing inference follows from the situation thus revealed. The ability to write English correctly does not belong to the great masters of our speech. It is limited to the obscure men who have devoted themselves to the task of showing how far these vaunted writers have fallen short of the ideas of linguistic propriety entertained by their unrecognized betters. As a result of these critical crusades there is no escape from the dismal conclusion that the correct use of the language is not to be found in the authors whom every one reads with pleasure, but is an accomplishment reserved exclusively for those whom nobody can succeed in reading at all.—Professor Thomas R. Lounsbury in Harper's Magazine.

Squirrels Are "Handy."

The handiness of the squirrel is something extraordinary in the animal world. He sits up on his hind paws and uses the fore paws in many ways just as a man does. He strikes with it and wards off a blow from another, and squirrel quarrels rarely go further than attempts to cuff each other like children. A lady who lives in our county and who is the protector of squirrels in that region told me that she had contrived a little rack to be filled with nuts, so that they came to the opening singly, one dropping into the place as another was taken out, and this was fixed by her window so that she could watch the squirrels come. One day a squirrel took the last nut and was quietly eating it on the window bench when another came and, finding none in the rack, went up to the eating squirrel and gave him a deliberate box on the ear and went away.—W. J. Stillman in Century.

Big, Big Words.

"Those who are accustomed to ridicule present day scientists because of their fondness for big words," said the etymologist, "will find them much more moderate in the concoction of words than the old timers.

"For instance, I have just come across the account of a scientific treatise published in the seventeenth century that contains words even much more cumbersome than its title, which, by the way, is 'Panzoologicomineralogia,' a good mouthful surely, yet the meaning is easily ascertained when the word is reduced to its component parts.

"The list of long titles that were then favorites would cause the modern book clerk a spasm, yet the list could be gone into indefinitely. A play in blank verse published in the latter part of the seventeenth century had as its alluring title 'Chrononhotonthologos,' and this was the opening sentence:

"'Aldeborontiphoscophornio, where left you Chrononhotonthologos?'

"If the modern mouthing actor can hardly get simple Anglo-Saxon words over the footlights, how could he get along with that morsel?"—New York Herald.

For a Shave de Luxe.

"Let me give you a tip for which I think you will be grateful," said a local barber in one of the downtown shops the other day. "Always maintain a pleasant feeling and a slight smile if possible when in a barber's chair for the purpose of being shaved. When the face is in a smile and the muscles are relaxed it is very much easier for the barber to run over it with a razor. This is especially applicable to persons who have a tough and wiry beard."—Washington Star.

A Mean Trick.

Oddly Marked Tombstone.

In an old graveyard in Maine the monument to the founder of a distinguished family is marked with the outline of a human leg. It is formed by black streaks in the granite running through the stone, for at the back there is another leg, but much smaller in dimensions. Nobody saw this blemish when the stone was set up. Not until years had passed did any one notice it. People concluded that the stonecutters, not wishing to go to the expense of quarrying out another block, so hid the leg with cement and stone dust that the actions of the storms of a dozen winters were necessary to expose the strangely formed disfigurement.

"Dew Ponds."

Among the most singular archaeological remains found in Great Britain are the ancient "dew ponds," the construction of which is ascribed to people of the Neolithic age. The purpose of these ponds was to furnish drinking water for cattle. An exposed position, where springs were absent, was selected, and a broad, hollowed surface was formed and covered over with straw or some other nonconducting material. Above was spread a thick layer of clay strewn with stones. During the night the cold surface of the clay caused an abundance of moisture to condense from the lower layers of the air. Some of these ancient dew ponds are still in working order.

A Powerful Drug.

Cloves are simply the dried flower buds of a beautiful evergreen tree growing naturally on the Spice islands. These flower buds are gathered when they have become of a bright red and are just on the point of opening. The name comes from the resemblance of the prepared spice to small nails, from the French word clou, for nail. Cloves are very heavily charged with a pungent, acrid, volatile oil, as much as 20 per cent sometimes being extracted. This oil is valuable for flavoring and scenting purposes and has a limited field in medicine, but the habit of "eating cloves," in which young folks and too often old ones indulge, is very reprehensible, as the oil is a powerful drug, becoming in many cases an insidious poison.

Henry Strasburg, the "Rhoda Judge" is now prepared for any and all kinds of business that may come, in his line of doings. "Splicings" a speciality. satisfaction gauranteed. First come, first served.

Deer Park township, can pride itself of having as peaceable a lot of citizens as you will ever find bunched together on any frontier land. It's first years record goes down in history as a peaceable one. Here's good luck to every good citizen that comes here to make a home among us.

We understand that there will be two blacksmith shops going up at Rhoda, this spring. We must say that we would not advise anyone to come in second.

Some time ago, a fellow here wrote a letter down to one of the county officials. in regard to business matters, which this worthy official had overlooked or laid aside rather, and called his attention to the matter agian and this is the reply: I am surprised at your way of writing me, do you not know that there is no law compelling us or me to do that kind of work? Now, this may be true, but on the other hand, where do we tax payers come in, outside of footing the bills, if we cannot have the privilege of getting business matters attended to without applying the law, as it seems.

Thats All.

U. S. Commissioner S H. Drew of McIntosh has a date set for taking final proof for May 14th. Any settler who desires to take proof before him to save the expense of going to Crookston can make their applications at this office, or with Stephen Singer at Rhoda.

STRANGLED BY THIEVES

Curious Method of Attack Adopted by Robbers In New York.

Dr. Armand L. Dufloo, sixty-nine years old, white haired and venerable in appearance, the dean of New York pathologists and a civil war veteran, was choked into insensibility on the stoop of his own home recently and robbed of a gold watch and chain, $79 in cash, his medical case and a portfolio of letters and memoranda.

The strange part of it is that the man who did his best to strangle the aged practitioner had been a passenger with him in a Twenty-third street crosstown car shortly before, and the doctor, with the keen eye of a scientist, had noted his long, claw-like fingers, his wonderfully elongated face and prominent features, so strongly marked that, as the doctor said when he told his story, he was a man who would be noticed among a thousand, especially by one interested in anatomy. Dr. Dufloo declared that he was a typical strangler.

Another curious feature of the case is that, although a full description of this man and of the shorter man who accompanied and aided him was given to the police less than an hour after Dr. Dufloo was attacked and nearly killed, it was not until several days later that detectives were sent to the doctor's home to obtain a full story of his experience.

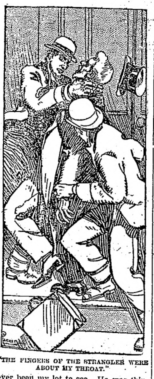
Dr. Dufloo, who served five years in the civil war, has thirty-five medals for bravery on the field. In whispers, and painfully, he told the story of his attack. Here it is as he told it:

"When I returned to my home at 10 o'clock there was a telephone message asking me to come at once to the home of a woman patient. I knew she was very ill, and I remained there until 12:30 in the morning and then took a Third avenue surface car to Twenty-third street.

"I was very hungry when I reached that point, so I entered a restaurant on the corner.

"I sat near the front of the room, and on looking out of the window I noticed a middle aged man, short and thick set, with a dark brown beard touched with streaks of gray, who peered into the place as he paced back and forth on the sidewalk. Several times he gazed at me with an anxious look on his face. I wondered somewhat, but did not attach importance to it.

"After I had rested I walked to the corner and took a crosstown car bound west. When I sat down the first person I noticed was the thickset man who had been watching me through the window, and next to him sat one of the strangest looking men it has ever been my lot to see. He was thin, but apparently of an extremely sinewy build.



"THE FINGERS OF THE STRANGLER WERE ABOUT MY THROAT."

"The curious features were his hands and face. His face was extremely narrow and unusually long. His forehead was bulging. So were his eyes. His nose was prominent and his mouth large. Indeed it seemed as if nature had exaggerated every feature of this man's face. Even the cheek bones were prominent.

"But his hands were what especially attracted me. They were extremely long—longer than any fingers I have ever seen, and claw-like. There was no doubt of their strength. The joints were large and well articulated. The moment I saw these startling looking fingers I thought of what a strangle hold they could take. The man became associated in my mind as a strangler.

"When I reached my house I had barely time to open the outer door when there was a swift rush, and the claw-like fingers of the strangler were about my throat. In the fleeting glimpse I got by the vestibule light of the vulture-like face of the man I recognized my fellow passengers. The shorter man had dodged up behind me and held my arms to my side. When I recovered I was lying on the stoop."

Frederick Wolf, a neighbor, was robbed in a manner similar to that of Dr. Dufloo only a few nights before and, it is thought, by the same man.

Indispensability.

"No," said a lecturer, "it doesn't do to get swelled head and think you're indispensable to the welfare of this world.

"I was in the lobby of a big hotel in Cincinnati when a bus load of traveling salesmen came from the station. Every man of them as he signed the register paused to shake hands with the hotel clerk, a fatherly old fellow who had been there many years.

"'Ah,' said one of them to the clerk 'it's a good thing you're still on deck Uncle Dave. I don't think the house could run without you.'

"'Couldn't it, just!' said Uncle Dave 'You fellows would come in here, and if there was a strange clerk you'd say "Where's Uncle Dave?"

"'And the clerk would say: "Why didn't you hear? He died a month ago."

"'And then you'd say: "Well, I'll be darned! That's too bad. Say, when'll dinner be ready?"'"

Shortsighted Animals.

So far as naturalists have been able to ascertain there is no such thing as shortsight among animals in a state of nature. In the case, however, of domestic animals and wild ones in confinement shortsight is by no means unknown. Many people who have kept dogs and cats will remember instances of pets which were unable to distinguish friends from strangers at a short distance. Horses, too, frequently suffer from shortsight and other derangements of the vision, and this kind of thing is sometimes met with in the case of cattle. The diseases of the eye which frequently affect wild animals in captivity are to be chiefly attributed to the narrow space in which they are confined. The eyes are never exercised upon distant objects and therefore lose the powers which use of this kind calls forth.

The Glowworm Cavern.

The greatest wonder of the antipodes is the celebrated glowworm cavern, discovered in 1891 in the heart of the Tasmanian wilderness. The cavern or caverns (there appears to be a series of such caverns in the vicinity, each separate and distinct) are situated near the town of Southport, Tasmania, in a limestone bluff, about four miles from Ida bay. The appearance of the main cavern is that of an underground river, the entire floor of the subterranean passage being covered with water about a foot and a half in depth. These wonderful Tasmanian caves are similar to all caverns found in limestone formation, with the exception that their roofs and sides literally shine with the light emitted by the millions of glowworms which inhabit them.

Nose Drinking In Norway.

The Norwegian papers tell of a speedy and efficacious method of becoming intoxicated prevailing in the slums of Christiania. The Orebladet describes how it is done. The drunkard fills the palm of his hand with "aquevit" (strong corn brandy) and sniffs it through his nose. A few applications do the work, while the same quantity of liquor taken into the stomach would hardly be felt. "Nose drinking" has become a real vice with some individuals. The effect of it is terrible, because the whole nervous system is paralyzed in a moment, and the drunkard remains almost unconscious for several minutes. Afterward a sleepy fatigue is felt, as after smoking opium.

Not an Arrest, but a Rescue.

"You were arrested for striking your wife."

"No, judge," answered the unworthy specimen of manhood who was on trial; "I had made a pass at her, and she was just reachin' for the stove lid when the officers came and took me in charge. That wasn't an arrest. That was a rescue."—Washington Star.

Satisfactorily Defined.

Willie—Pa, what is the meaning of the expression "touch and go?" Papa—It's very simple, my son. It means extreme speed and refers to the professional borrowers, who make a touch and go so fast you seldom see them again.

Men With Hearts.

"I don't believe bachelors have any hearts," she said.

"Why, we're just the men who do have them," he replied.

"Why is that?" she asked.

"Because we haven't lost them."

Relief From Ennui.

"Don't you ever get tired of doing nothing?" asked one.

"Oh, yes," replied the other languidly.

"Well, what do you do then?"

"Take a rest."

Industry keeps the body healthy the mind clear, the heart whole and the purse full.—Simmons.

Only Pine Martens.

A series of gruesome incidents had terrified an English neighborhood. What made these incidents peculiarly horrible was their tragic mystery. Nobody could explain them. Sheep and lambs which were in full health overnight, were found dead in the morning, their bodies uninjured, but drained of every drop of blood. Ghosts and vampires and all imaginable horrors were blamed, and the whole countryside was up. The damage continued, and in a single night a farmer had fourteen out of twenty-one lambs killed, and the same pen was chosen the next night, and the remaining seven lambs were destroyed. In the early peep of day the slayers were discovered, all hideous from their sanguinary work. They were neither men nor monsters, but a couple of pine martens which, having routed a pair of magpies from their nest, had there made their home and thence nightly scoured the country round about.

HISTORIC BITS.

It is thought that the game of whist was first played in the time of King Henry VIII. of England.

The first steamer to sail from Liverpool for New York was the Royal William, 407 tons, commanded by G. Swainson, R. N.; she sailed July 5, 1838, and was 19 days on the trip. The first transatlantic screw steamer was the Masaschusetts, taken out in 1847 by Capt. R. B. Forbes.

In the middle ages swings were hung by an ingenious pulley device. The rope was passed over a grooved wheel that was fastened to the ceiling by a bracket. The one who was swinging was not only pushed from behind by one of his fellows, but was also helped from the front by striking with his foot the outstretched foot of another comrade. This sport was a favorite pastime of pages.

The first steamer to make a voyage across the Western ocean was the Savannah of 350 tons and a length of 100 feet. She sailed from Savannah May 24, 1819, and arrived at Liverpool June 20. Her steam was purely auxiliary, for when the wind was fair or the sea high the paddle wheels were unshipped and stowed on deck. Her voyage was continued to Russia, and on the return from St. Petersburg she reached New York direct in 26 days.

An archaeologist points out that the hat band in the modern man's hat can be traced to a fillet which in ancient times held in shape a simple piece of cloth. Sometimes this fillet was tied in a bow behind, the tails of which survive in the Scotch cap, the sailor hat and the bishop's miter. A little bow inside in the lining of the hat is a survival of a lacing which kept the lining in shape, or possibly it dates back to a time when a hat was made by putting a string through holes in a flat piece of leather and by drawing it together for a crown.

Aseptic.

"Have you sterilized the baby's milk and boiled the water you put in it, and disinfected the bottle, Maggie?"

"Yis, mum. Here ut is."

"But, for heaven's sake what's that floating in it?"

"Be aisy, mum—that's no microbe. Ut's only a cockroach."—Cleveland Leader.

HAD HEART PAINS

A Critical Case of Rheumatism Cured By Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

While Mr. W. S. Geisel, of No. 125 East Coates street, Moberly, Mo., was steadily working at his trade in a foundry at that place, he became the victim of an attack of rheumatism, and his experience is that of thousands who are compelled to work in similar surroundings. He describes his situation as follows:

"I had been at work for a long time in a foundry where I was exposed to dampness. First my feet began to hurt and to swell, then my knees and my shoulder joints began to be affected in the same way. Finally I could not walk without great difficulty and suffering and had to stop work altogether. My appetite was feeble and I grew very pale and weak. I began to have pains about my heart and it fluttered a great deal. I became greatly alarmed about my condition. My mother knew about the virtues of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, as they had given her back her health when she was nearly wasting to death, and when she found that they were good for rheumatism too, she began to give them to me about a month after I was attacked. That was in the early part of March, 1903, and by June they had driven away the pains and swelling and had restored my appetite and color. Then I felt strong enough to take up a line of outdoor work and now, in October, I regard myself as entirely well and I am about to go into a foundry again at St. Louis."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills also cure other diseases springing from impure blood or disordered nerves, such as sciatica, locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis and all forms of weakness in male or female. They may be had at all druggists or directly from the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

CHURCH CELEBRITIES.

Joseph Nix, the Wesleyan reformer, took 3,845 signatures to the pledge in a nine days' gospel temperance meeting recently held in Bradford, England.

Rev. Silvester Horne has a billiard room at Whitefield tabernacle, London, says the Ram's Horn, and he says it has been the best recruiting ground for his church.

Rev. Mr. Rowell of Porter, I. T., wields the sledge in his blacksmith shop on week days and attends to his ministerial duties on Sundays. He recently married Anna Gardner and Sam Acre in his blacksmith shop, not even stopping long enough to wash his face.

Father Boulet, a venerable Oregon priest, blessed with an abundance of this world's goods, has decided to dispose of some of his wealth by building churches. He is now building a church at Blaine, in that state, and has offered the Catholics of Lyndon to erect one there, provided only that they secure the site.

Father F. Ramsey, after 40 years of labor in the wilds of Ashantiland, Africa, is spending a brief vacation in the United States. One of his experiences was when he was captured by the Ashantis, who, while they allowed himself and family freedom during the day, bound him in irons every night. Mr. Ramsey still carries his shackles about with him on his travels.

Rev. Robert Hurley is the only Congregational minister who is a member of that famous London club, the Athenaeum, and he is also a F. R. S. It is curious to reflect that whereas he has made a world-wide reputation as a mathematician, he showed but little aptitude for mathematics as a boy, and was 14 before he really knew his multiplication table.

GRAND TO LIVE

And the Last Laugh Is Always the Best.

"Six months ago I would have laughed at the idea that there could be anything better for a table beverage than coffee," writes an Ohio woman—"now I laugh to know there is."

"Since childhood I drank coffee as freely as any other member of the family. The result was a puny, sickly girl, and as I grew into womanhood I did not gain in health, but was afflicted with heart trouble, a weak and disordered stomach, wrecked nerves and a general breaking down, till last winter at the age of 38 I seemed to be on the verge of consumption. My friends greeted me with 'How bad you look! What a terrible color!' and this was not very comforting.

"The doctors and patent medicines did me absolutely no good. I was thoroughly discouraged.

"Then I gave up coffee and commenced Postum Food Coffee. At first I didn't like it, but after a few trials and following the directions exactly, it was grand. It was refreshing and satisfying. In a couple of weeks I noticed a great change. I became stronger, my brain grew clearer, I was not troubled with forgetfulness as in coffee times, my power of endurance was more than doubled. The heart trouble and indigestion disappeared and my nerves became steady and strong.

"I began to take an interest in things about me. Housework and home-making became a pleasure. My friends have marveled at the change and when they inquire what brought it about, I answer 'Postum Food Coffee, and nothing else in the world.'" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

MINNESOTA ITEMS.

St. Paul.—The Lacrosse team will play a sample game for the benefit of the students at the state university.

Winona.—It is expected that seeding operations in this vicinity will begin in about three weeks.

Minneapolis.—The Soo road will haul the city's garbage to the crematory next summer.

Faribault.—Shattuck defeated the Cedar Rapids high school basketball team in a brilliant game here by a score of 36 to 18.

St. Paul.—A committee is appointed to suggest a celebration of Minnesota's semi-centennial.

St. Paul.—Congressman Stevens secures an appropriation to complete the St. Paul postoffice.

Minneapolis.—Labor Commissioner Williams says the truancy laws are not enforced satisfactorily.

St. Paul.—The girls at the farm school demonstrate their knowledge of the art of dressmaking.

Duluth.—Anton Hanson of this city tried to drown a cat in the harbor and came near drowning himself, while the cat escaped.

St. Peter.—Rigid enforcement of the state law as applied to the retail liquor traffic is to be the issue in one of the most exciting municipal campaigns St. Peter has known in a decade.

Mankato.—The telephone is being made a valuable adjunct in revival services at Stewartville, in the Winona district of the Methodist church.

Crookston.—Charles Beaghen, an employe in the railroad roundhouse, was badly scalded about the head and face and narrowly escaped death while at work underneath an engine.

Duluth.—The largest building permit ever issued in this city was taken out by the Duluth, Missabe & Northern Railroad company for the erection of an ore dock to cost $500,000.

Little Falls.—Robert Wallace of this city was arrested yesterday by Chief of Police W. T. Tourtillotte and Corporal John L. Cook of Company I, Twenty-eighth infantry, stationed at Fort Snelling, and will face a charge of desertion before a military court at Fort Riley, Kan.

St. Paul.—The Third squadron of the Second cavalry arrived at Fort Snelling.

Minneapolis.—William Porter Eastman, assistant general freight agent of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad, died of pneumonia.

Duluth.—N. S. Mattson of Crookston, who represents a collection agency there, arrived in Duluth last Sunday and mysteriously disappeared Wednesday.

Le Roy.—The annual silver medal declamatory contest was held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Matthew Sly won the medal and Mrs. Charles Howe was awarded second place. Seven competitors took part in the contest.

White Earth.—Joseph Louzon, captain of the agency police force, was shot and instantly killed by Joseph Chounard, a disreputable character, this morning.

Thief River Falls.—Henry W. Lee of this place has received notice that the United States court of claims has awarded him $2,000 for services performed for the Winnebago Indians, in Wisconsin, many years ago. Lee claimed $70,000 as his fee for the services rendered, and the matter has been before the different departments at Washington for thirty years. About a year ago an offer to compromise the claim for $200 was made, but this Lee refused and appealed to the court of claims.

Minneapolis.—A draft for over $26,000, representing the 1905 taxes on the Western Union Telegraph company, which are still unpaid, has been turned over by the state treasurer to the attorney general's office. The latter office is now working on a complaint and will begin suit within a few days. Suits are now pending against the Western Union for the collection of extra taxes from 1899 to 1904.

St. Paul.—Bonds deposited with the state by trust companies are placed by the new code in the custody of the public examiner, instead of the state treasurer. State employes are listing and checking over the bonds on deposit preparatory to the transfer. There are $560,000 in securities so deposited. The state treasurer is also relieved of the care of deeds to land used for state purposes. They will hereafter be kept by the auditor.

Stillwater.—Competition of the flax twine industry is not feared by the state board of control for this season, as nearly all the output of the prison plant is already sold. The prison cannot come within 6,000,000 pounds of supplying the state demand, and the flax twine plant will not be able to put more than 1,000,000 pounds in the market for this crop. It is contracting on a large scale for flax of this year's crop, and will go after the business in earnest during 1907.

Duluth.—The Booth Steamship company will establish a new line for its steamers this summer and will place the Soo City upon it in addition to its other boats. It will be between Duluth and Mackinac Island and will take about a week for the round trip. It will be operated as soon as the passenger season opens.

Hamline.—Bids for construction of the new main building at the university were opened this afternoon by the board of control. Eleven bids were put in, and it will take some careful tabulation to determine who is lowest, as bids are asked under several conditions.

St. Cloud.—Anthony Schwinden, a workman employed in a quarry west of town, has met with an accident that will probably cost him his eyesight. Schwinden is a driller and was at work driving steel wedges. A piece of steel struck him in the face, so injuring his eyes that it is feared he will become blind. He has been taken to Minneapolis for treatment by specialists.

St. Paul.—The Lacrosse club will make an effort to introduce the great Canadian game to the athletes of the university of Minnesota this season.

Bemidji.—Since the breaking up of the logging roads the recruiting office has been doing good, business, many of the lumbermen being inclined to give Uncle Sam the benefit of their services for a time.

St. Paul.—William Mack and Harry Irvine, arrested several days ago, were arraigned in police court, under the names of G. T. Wheeler and W. F. Wilson on the charge of defrauding an innkeeper. It was charged that they beat the West hotel management out of $25.

HEARING WAS TOO GOOD.

Examinee Who Could Hear the Tick of a Watch When Not Running.

"The physical examination of new policemen often furnishes a lot of amusement," remarked Chief of Police Hayes the other day while in a reminiscent mood, relates the Kansas City Independent. "Catch questions don't go, of course, but every now and then they are asked by way of a josh. I remember a young fellow—he's now a sergeant—who fell into a trap the prettiest you ever saw. The doctor had examined him up and down and all around, and then declared that he would make a test of his hearing. Taking a watch out of his pocket, with a wink at me, he asked: 'Do you hear that tick?'

"'Yes, perfectly,' the young man answered.

"He held it a foot from the applicant's ear.

"'Still hear it?' he asked.

"'Yes, sir.'

"'Now stand back three paces.'

"The young man did so.

"'Now,' said the examiner, 'do you hear it from that distance?'

"The applicant listened intently. Then he smiled and nodded.

"'I still hear it, sir,' he said.

"'You certainly have the most remarkable hearing I ever came across,' said the examiner. 'That watch has not been running for three weeks.'"

Didn't Have the Opportunity.

Duzen had just returned from a business trip to a little town, and he was telling about the hotel there, which he described as the very worst he ever knew. To cap his troubles there, he awoke in the night and found the gas escaping.

"But then," said he, "you couldn't blame the gas. I would have escaped myself if there had been another hotel in the place."—Stray Stories.

NO REST NIGHT OR DAY.

With Irritating Skin Humor—Hair Began to Fall Out—Wonderful Result from Cuticura Remedies.

"About the latter part of July my whole body began to itch. I did not take much notice of it at first, but it began to get worse all the time, and then I began to get uneasy and tried all kinds of baths and other remedies that were recommended for skin humors; but I became worse all the time. My hair began to fall out and my scalp itched all the time. Especially at night, just as soon as I would get in bed and get warm, my whole body would begin to itch and my finger nails would keep it irritated, and it was not long before I could not rest night or day. A friend asked me to try the Cuticura Remedies, and I did, and the first application helped me wonderfully. For about four weeks I would take a hot bath every night and then apply the Cuticura Ointment to my whole body; and I kept getting better, and by the time I used four boxes of Cuticura I was entirely cured, and my hair stopped falling out. D. E. Blankenship, 319 N. Del. St., Indianapolis, Ind. Oct. 27, 1905."

Seemed Unlikely.

She—I see that in the preface to your volume of poems you say you haven't an enemy in the world.

COULD NOT KEEP UP.

Broken Down, Like Many Another Woman, With Exhausting Kidney Troubles.

Mrs. A. Taylor, of Wharton, N. J., says: "I had kidney trouble in its most painful and severe form, and the torture I went through now seems to have been almost unbearable. I had backache, pains in the side and loins, dizzy spells and hot, feverish headaches. There were bearing-down pains, and the kidney secretions passed too frequently, and with a burning sensation. They showed sediment. I became discouraged, weak, languid and depressed, so sick and sore that I could not keep up. As doctors did not cure me I decided to try Doan's Kidney Pills, and with such success that my troubles were all gone after using eight boxes, and my strength, ambition and general health is fine."

A TRAINED NURSE

After Years of Experience, Advises Women in Regard to Their Health.

Mrs
Martha
Pohlman

Mrs. Martha Pohlman of 55 Chester Avenue, Newark, N. J., who is a graduate Nurse from the Blockley Training School, at Philadelphia, and for six years Chief Clinic Nurse at the Philadelphia Hospital, writes the letter printed below. She has the advantage of personal experience, besides her professional education, and what she has to say may be absolutely relied upon.

Many other women are afflicted as she was. They can regain health in the same way. It is prudent to heed such advice from such a source.

Mrs. Pohlman writes:

"I am firmly persuaded, after eight years of experience with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, that it is the safest and best medicine for any suffering woman to use."

"Immediately after my marriage I found that my health began to fail me. I became weak and pale, with severe bearing-down pains, fearful backaches and frequent dizzy spells. The doctors prescribed for me, yet I did not improve. I would bloat after eating, and frequently become nauseated. I had pains down through my limbs so I could hardly walk. It was as bad a case of female trouble as I have ever known. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, however, cured me within four months. Since that time I have had occasion to recommend it to a number of patients suffering from all forms of female difficulties, and I find that while it is considered unprofessional to recommend a patent medicine, I can honestly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for I have found that it cures female ills, where all other medicine fails. It is a grand medicine for sick women."

Money cannot buy such testimony as this—merit alone can produce such results, and the ablest specialists now agree that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the most universally successful remedy for all female diseases known to medicine.

When women are troubled with irregular, suppressed or painful periods, weakness, displacement or ulceration of the female organs, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation, backache, bloating (or flatulence), general debility, indigestion, and nervous prostration, or are beset with such symptoms as dizziness, faintness, lassitude, excitability, irritability, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, "all-gone" and "want-to-be-left-alone" feelings, blues and hopelessness, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles.

No other female medicine in the world has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement.

The needless suffering of women from diseases peculiar to their sex is terrible to see. The money which they pay to doctors who do not help them is an enormous waste. The pain is cured and the money is saved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

It is well for women who are ill to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. The present Mrs. Pinkham is the daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, her assistant for many years before her decease, and for twenty-five years since her advice has been freely given to sick women. In her great experience, which covers many years, she has probably had to deal with dozens of cases just like yours. Her advice is strictly confidential.

means a productive capacity in dollars of over $16 per acre.

This on land, which has cost the farmer nothing, but the price of tilling it, tells its own story.

The Canadian Government gives absolutely free to every settler 160 acres of such land.

Lands adjoining can be purchased at from $6 to $10 per acre from railroad and other corporations.

Already 175,000 farmers from the United States have made their homes in Canada.

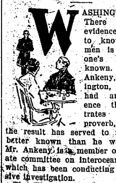
WASHINGTON GOSSIP

PREDICTING A BRILLIANT FUTURE FOR SENATOR KNOX.

AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL

French Law Requires Registration of Foreigners — Expert Riflemen Needed in Our Army—Present Chinese Army.



WASHINGTON. — There is still evidence that not to know certain men is to argue one's self unknown. Senator Ankeny, of Washington, has just had an experience that illustrates the old proverb, although the result has served to make him better known than he was before. Mr. Ankeny is a member of the senate committee on interoceanic canals, which has been conducting an extensive investigation.

The Washington senator was discussing with Senator Flint, of California, the other day the progress of the investigation and the character of it. "Do you know, Flint, there is a smooth faced young-looking man who attends our meetings every day and who seems to be doing some work for the committee who is bound to make his mark?" said Mr. Ankeny. "I have listened to him asking questions and he is as smart as a whip. He is bound to be heard from. In my opinion he is a coming man."

"Why, who is he?" inquired Mr. Flint.

"I do not know," was the answer. "I have seen him around here quite a good deal. Oh, there he comes now," pointing to a well dressed dapper gentleman.

Senator Flint nearly collapsed when he recognized former attorney general, and now senator, Philander C. Knox.

From Missouri.

THE modest citizens of the town of Aurora, situated in the Ozark mountains of Missouri, demand that the capital of the nation be moved from the banks of the Potomac to the health giving atmosphere of the Missouri. A petition to that effect in the form of resolution adopted by the citizens of Aurora has been introduced into the house by Representative Shartel, of Neosho, Mo. The good people in the far off Ozarks believe that the malarial atmosphere in Washington breeds corruption and decay and in order to cleanse the body politic of all graft and crookedness the big marble buildings of Washington should be torn down and removed bodily to the purer atmosphere of the Missouri mountains. In their petition these good people declare:

"Whereas, Editors and business men and leaders of thought are protectors of public interests;

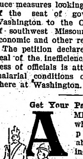
"Whereas, Our capital is located at the extreme side of our country;

"Whereas, The present location of our capital, Washington, is a very malarial and unhealthy location, therefore be it

"Resolved, That our representatives in congress of the United States be, and hereby are, instructed to introduce measures looking to the removal of the seat of government from Washington to the Ozark mountains of southwest Missouri for sanitary, economic and other reasons."

The petition declares that a "great" deal of the inefficiency and crookedness of officials is attributable to the malarial conditions of the atmosphere at Washington.

Get Your Passports.



AMERICANS who who are contemplating tours abroad that will include France and Germany this year will be wise to provide themselves with means of readily proving their identity especially in France. They should not neglect to arm themselves with passports setting forth distinctly who and what they are in order to save themselves embarrassment, anxiety and annoyance. A caution to this effect has been sent out and it was inspired by the present somewhat strained relations between France and Germany.

The department of state has received from the consul general at Paris a communication stating that the French law requires the registration of all foreigners who go there to reside, including students. This registration is done at the offices of the prefect of police in Paris or Lyons or at the office of the mayors in any other parts of France. Any change of address must be communicated to the police. To secure this registration and the small certificates of identity the foreigner must furnish either a passport duly vised or a consular affidavit. The consul general cites two or three instances illustrating the importance of carrying everywhere papers to identify the bearer.

One of these incidents is that of a well known American woman who on going to church one Sunday morning was knocked down by a cab. She was not seriously hurt, but was insensible for several hours. No one knew who she was and she carried no papers of any kind. As she was richly dressed and wore valuable jewelry the police were impressed and took care of her, but she was taken to a city hospital. Upon recovering she was taken to her hotel. Had she carried a card or an addressed envelope much of this inconvenience and embarrassment would have been avoided.

Passing of the Sharpshooter.

THERE is much regret among officers of the army and among congressmen who are interested in the efficiency of the army that experts skilled in the use of the arms are disappearing. The old sharpshooter who made accurate shooting a national trait of the American soldier is not in evidence as he was. Chairman Hull, of the committee on military affairs of the house, has urged increased pay for expert riflemen in the army in order to encourage sharpshooting. In discussing this subject the other day, Mr. Hull, who is very much in earnest, declared:

"With the passing of the frontiersmen, the trapper and the Indian fighter, there has undoubtedly been a change in the character of the American people. A few generations ago hunting game was a necessity for the existence of many men and for a man to be handy with a gun was the rule and not the exception.

"The departure from the old habit grows wider every day. It was a common thing for men who lived in my father's time, for instance, to be good shots and to take a pride in their exploits with the weapons used at that time. How many young men now go into that sort of thing as a regular part of their education? I venture to say there is not one man in a hundred who knows how to handle a rifle or pistol. The effect has been plainly apparent in the kind of men who come up for enlistment in the army now. Few of them know anything about handling a gun. The reason increased pay was asked for expert riflemen and sharpshooters was to encourage our soldiers to be crack shots."

Not Be Caught Napping.

QUITE a thrill of expectation has been sent throughout the army posts in the United States. Enlisted men and officers are on the qui vive and thousands of letters are being written home declaring that war may be on at any time and they be ordered to the front. This is all due to an order that was sent from the war department several weeks ago, to ascertain conditions in every post and to have all the troops in readiness to be moved on short notice if anything like an emergency occurs. There was no authoritative declaration that war was expected, but this order taken in connection with undoubted anxiety on the part of government officials about conditions in China led to the popular belief that an American army might be ordered to invade the Flowery kingdom at any moment.

Reports that have come from China recently are very pacific in tone, but at the same time President Roosevelt has determined that the United States will not be caught napping in case there is an anti-foreign outbreak in China that will imperil American lives and property. He has had the general staff of the army engaged for some months on working out a plan of invasion of China and operations there. A tentative plan has been submitted to him, but its provisions are all a profound secret. It is known in a general way that the chief of staff and his assistants believe that an army of not less than 20,000 should be sent to China in case of trouble. This is more than all the allied troops combined that marched to the rescue of Peking in the Boxer troubles.

MINNESOTA ITEMS.

St. Paul.—St. Paul men seek to capture the next meeting of the American Bowling congress.

Duluth.—Some of the Northern Minnesota Indians are about to receive $30,000 as their share of another land sale.

St. Peter.—Dates have been selected for the state Christian Endeavor convention, and it will be held in this city July 12, 13, 14 and 15.

St. Cloud.—The local Elks are making extensive arrangements for the entertainment of the state convention to be held here June 14 and 15.

Buhl.—Hilda Jorgren, a Finnish girl, 12 years of age, daughter of a settler living 14 miles west of here, is reported lost in the big woods.

Winona.—Fire last night destroyed the Campbell Brothers granary near Clyde, with 3,000 bushels of grain. The loss is $3,000, insurance $1,200.

Ely.—John Johnson has been arrested charged with having assaulted Matthew Gustafson, a Finn, in the rear of a saloon here.

Duluth.—Ernest Jam, 19 years of age, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Jam of Two Harbors, was drowned in Lake Superior off that port, as a result of going out too far on the thin ice.

Minneapolis.—Mrs. Amelia Benson, a prisoner at Central station, attempted suicide in her cell by hanging herself to one of the bars with a heavy handkerchief.

Minneapolis.—The new Minnesota code, it appears, omits mention of several counties, among them being Hennepin. There seems to have been a curious error on the part of some one.

St. Peter.—At its last meeting the board of county commissioners issued instructions to Auditor A. H. Freeman to procure certified lists of all mortgages owned by Nicollet county residents and filed for record in the counties of Sibley, Brown, Blue Earth and Le Sueur.

St. Paul.—The county commissioners adopted the report of the committee on claims allowing Sheriff Miesen $500 for his expenses in connection with the execution of William Williams on Feb. 13. The sheriff put in a bill for $772, but the committee considered this excessive and cut it down to $500.

Mankato.—The fruit growers of this section of the state are to hold a meeting in Mankato on the first Monday in April, for the purpose of forming a permanent organization. About thirty fruit growers in Blue Earth county are back of the movement. L. Z. Smith of this city was elected president at at preliminary meeting.

Pine River.—Falling from an organ stool, Mrs. R. Thorp, of Little Falls, sustained an injury to her spine which is very serious and from which she probably never will entirely recover. She was playing an organ when the stool on which she was seated gave way and she struck the floor very hard.

Minneapolis.—The city of Minneapolis wins in the action brought in the district court to invalidate the appropriation of $10,000 made by the city council for a Minneapolis exhibit at the Louisiana Purchase exposition held in St. Louis a year ago last summer.

Minneapolis.—It is claimed on good authority that the Great Northern will abandon its line between St. Cloud and Minneapolis on the east side of the Mississippi river, running all of its trains over the Osseo line, turning the line on the east side of the river over to the Northern Pacific, thus giving that company a double track between St. Cloud and Minneapolis.

St. Peter.—Fred Zuelsdorf, a carpenter at Henderson, while carrying a bundle of shingles along a narrow scaffold twenty feet above the ground, lost his balance and, to save himself from falling on his head and shoulders, jumped from the support. His prompt action doubtless saved him a fractured skull, but in alighting on his feet he broke the small bones in both his heels.

Duluth.—The state dairy and food department has clashed with Gordon & Dilworth, manufacturers of fruit jams and other products, over the question of coal tar dyes. The state chemist found a red aniline dye in a jar of their blackberry jam, and notified the retailer that it was illegal. The retailer called on the manufacturer, who refused to take the goods off his hands, and said the state department was either mistaken or "grafting."

Hastings.—Arthur Rude, Edward Otte and George Lytle, who entered Hanson Bros.' store on the night of March 12, pleaded guilty to burglary before Judge F. M. Crosby today and were sentenced to the state reformatory at St. Cloud.

St. Paul.—Governor Johnson has been asked by Governor Pardee of California, president of the National Irrigation congress, to name fifteen delegates from Minnesota to the next meeting of the congress, Sept 3 to 8, at Boise, Idaho.

Mabel.—The report that Mrs. W. R. Sherwood has been in a trance and saved herself from being buried alive by waking at an opportune moment, is denied by the woman's relatives. Mrs. Sherwood has been ill and is now recovering.

Pelican Rapids.—At a meeting of the Commercial Club G. M. Mills was elected president, J. F. Cocking vice-president, L. E. Lester secretary and Charles R. Frazee treasurer. Committees were appointed to further the interests of the city and surrounding country.

Henning.—Ernest Lindgren, a Soo brakeman of this place, was thrown from a box car at Altoona, and had his arm cut off near the shoulder. The accident, it is thought, will prove fatal, although he is still alive.

The Plummer Pioneer takes exception to the Thief River Falls News, claiming that the Robinson Merchantile Company got pretty near busted in Plummer, before they moved to Thief River Falls. So it has happened that the last two members of the "trio" that are still alive are scrapping among themselves. Give it to them John; sickem Chas:

It is hinted and even stated by those who are supposed to be "in the know" that there is an unofficial department under the state administration, the duty of which is to gather data for use in the coming campaign on every man named for office or suggested for any sort of political advancement and for every man of influence who may make his influence felt. —Duluth News Tribune.

The St. Hilaire Spectator and Thief River Falls News have dug up the old Collins and Dunn dead cats and started a lively scrap over their carkesses while both of them are mouldering in their political graves. Bury the hatchet gentlemen as the republican party will not stand for any of that kind of work this year, on the governor nomination, but you can doubtless get a chance to scratch each others eyes out over some of the primary election candidates.

Governor Johnson favors a railroad fare of 2 cents per mile. So does every man and women in Minnesota not directly interested in railroad corporations. No passes and a 2 cent fare should be the slogan in the approaching legislative campaign. Elect no man who will not subscribe to this program and the thing is done. —Preston Times.

We might get this law passed if senator Stephens is not down there to "buck it", for you bet he is a whale when it comes to representing the interest of the railroads in a legislative body.

The Grand Forks Times of last Friday tells it this way: "The position of state senator, now occupied by A D. Stephens of Crookston, will be filled by E. M. Walsh of the same city, so runs the slate. S. S. Stadsvold of Fosston will be candidate to succeed Mr. Bennett in the house. Gunder Krostue will succeed himself. This is a strong combination and will doubtless go through if properly sprung.

"It is also said that recent developments at Washington have renewed Mr. Stephen's hopes of going to congress, and that he will make a fight for the toga of Congressman Steenerson."—Thirteen Towns.

This last paragraph is no news to the iniciated; give us something new Foss but the last announcement is prehaps what made the snow start to thaw last week, as there is liable to be some warm times in the 9th before next September.

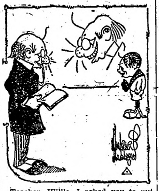
The Granite Falls Tribune man hands his old friend Senator Clapp the following bunch of blossoms: "Senator Clapp's speech the other day in the senate on the railroad rate bill was characteristic of our junior member and one of the best efforts of his servise in that body. He handled the subject as if he had studied it, and while he did not claim it was perfect yet he advocated it because he believed it to be a start in the right direction." —The Duluth News Tribune.

BENNET GETS A PLUMB

B.S. Bennett of Fosston, former member of the legislature, is Representative Steenerson's candidate for the White Earth Indian agency. It is understood that in view of the fact that the interior department has decided to oppose Simon Michelet's reappointment. Senator Clapp will join Steenerson in recommending Bennett's appoinment. There is no friction between Senator Nelson and Steenerson. Having Bennett in mind for the place, Steenerson was careful to ascertain the sentiment of Commissioner Leupp regarding Michelet, and with the commissioner opposed, he decided to press his man for the place.

The Park Rapids Clipper observes: "The editor of the St. Cloud Journal Press sees dire calamity ahead because the chairman of the Republican state central committee has not called the committees together with the idea of an early convention, and says that the chance of Republican success is being thus thrown away. Remembering the last campaign, few readers can believe the Journal-Press sincere in such remarks as there is certainly no more to be feared from Democratic success this year than when the Journal Press helped them win two years ago."—The Duluth News Tribune.

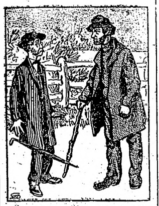
From Willie's Standpoint.



Teacher—Willie, I asked you to put an example on the board.

Willie—Well, ain't dat er horrible example?—New York World.

He Got What He Wanted.



"Sir, can you spare a little to 'elp a man oo's just left prison?"

"I'm very, very sorry for you, my good man—er—what were you in for?"

"Robbery, with violence."—Jugend.

Physical Culture.

A rational system of physical culture should insure to every man and woman who adopts it a perfectly erect, poised figure, a straight spine, a broad, deep and capacious chest, uplifted and flexible, and harmonious development of all the muscles. He or she should be easy and graceful in every movement, possessed of marked muscular power and endurance, splendid health and a voice of notable equality and power.

So much would the rational system of physical development do for those who followed it, and any method which will not accomplish all of these things, even for its least promising students, is in so much incomplete and false. The object of physical culture methods is to render the body a more perfect instrument, more strong, more enduring, more obedient, to the commands of the will.—Outing Magazine.

Just as you are pleased at finding faults you are displeased at finding perfection.—Lavater.

Two Odd Volumes.

The book done by a French monk who instead of writing the words cut the letters from the vellum page and formed a sort of stencil has its opposite in a Swedish translation of the four gospels, which was done in gold and silver leaf. The initial letters are cut from thin sheets of beaten gold done in delicate tracery, while the body of the text is of heavy silver. The foil is cemented to the parchment page with an adhesive which in spite of the undoubted antiquity of the book has not lost its powers. Most freak books were evidently done to perpetuate the name of the ingenious owner, but this carries absolutely no information as to its maker.

A more modern freak is the output of a Lyons silk weaving firm and, is a prayer book in which the letters are woven into the silk. But one copy was made of the book, and this is in the government library at Paris.

A Remarkable Bridge.

Among the many odd nooks and corners and crannies of the auld Emerald Isle is Carrick-a-rede, on the Great Northern railroad of Ireland. It is an isolated rock, separated from the mainland by a chasm sixty feet wide and more than eighty feet deep, and it is at this place that the salmon are intercepted in their retreat to the rivers. A rude bridge of ropes is thrown across, which remains during the fishing season, and this bridge, which is protected by a single rope rail, swings about in the most uncomfortable manner, often rendering it a dangerous feat in stormy weather save to the natives, who cross it with the utmost indifference. The name is derived from "Carrig-a-rambaidh" (the rock in the road) on account of the intercepting of the salmon. Near by on the west side of the island is a cavern in which have been found the bones of horse, ox, deer, sheep, goat, badger, otter, water rat and of several kinds of birds.

Freshness of Youth.

He was a respectable looking man, and, judging from his appearance, he was a butcher by trade, and this belief was verified a few minutes later. He carried a white apron under his arm, and as he entered a car a huge cleaver dropped from the bundle to the floor. A youth who had not reached the age of discretion sank out merrily, "Say, mister, you dropped your pocketknife." The passengers laughed, but they could not help but think that the youth took a long chance on kidding a man with a cleaver.—Albany Journal.

"Dew Ponds."

Among the most singular archaeological remains found in Great Britain are the ancient "dew ponds," the construction of which is ascribed to people of the Neolithic age. The purpose of these ponds was to furnish drinking water for cattle. An exposed position, where springs were absent, was selected, and a broad, hollowed surface was formed and covered over with straw or some other nonconducting material. Above was spread a thick layer of clay strewn with stones. During the night the cold surface of the clay caused an abundance of moisture to condense from the lower layers of the air. Some of these ancient dew ponds are still in working order.

Mixed Feelings.

The little girl who, after a drink of soda, declared that her nose felt as if her foot was asleep has evidently grown up and retained her happy power of expression, for evidently the young lady mentioned in Punch is the same person who drank bubbles when she was small.

The young woman was traveling in a coach as an elderly and somewhat sour looking man, in trying to open the window, pinched his finger nail severely.

"Oh!" exclaimed the lady sympathetically. "How horrid! I always think anything wrong with one's nails sets one's teeth on edge all down one's back!"

Andrew Arneson and Halvor Egeland of Gully were visiting friends in this locality this week.

Our Deer park friends were airing some of their differences in justice court here Monday last.

The building of the farmers boat is being pushed all along the line, and shares are being taken rapidly

P. Sullivan is raising the price of a school house bell and a flag for the new school house by popular subscription.

Do not fail to attend the boat meeting at Kratka April 4th, as you must remember this is every mans fight who lives tributary to Red Lake River.

Your School orders are as good as cash, with the H. C. Selden Lumber Co., at Plummer. Come and see me.

Jim O'Brien, Henry Arndt, and A.W. Shosten have improved the oppertunity of a good ice crop, and have stored enough for their next summers use.

Miss Katie O'Brien has taken quite an active interest in the building of the farmers boat by the Red Lake River transportation company and has subscribed for one share in the enterprise.

Farmers, who are going to do fencing this spring should call on E. B. Laneger, at Plummer Pioneer Hardware Store, for all kinds of fencing. Will make prices right.

Walt McAndrees and W.G. Hunt were out in the eastern part of this township, and in the northern part of Deer park Township getting share holders for the boat. They met with very good success.

The committee apointed to get the articles of incorperation drawn for the Red Lake River transportation company met at Highlanding Wednesday, and had the articles signed and called a general meeting of the share holders to meet at Kratka April 4th to elect the board of Directors.

Even J. Sund returned Saturday from Bridge, where he has been working in the lumber camps the past winter. He reports a prosperous winters work, and will use the part earned in making improvements on his claim this summer. Mr. Sund is not one of the style of lumber jacks who blows his money in as soon as he makes it. but puts it to good use in improveing his farm.

Honors Easy.

People who were present smiled at the little passage of arms which took place between two young ladies at a luncheon recently. One of them, a bride, shaking hands in her characteristically cordial way, said to the other: "I'm so glad to meet you! You have afforded me so very much amusement just lately."

"Amusement?" said the other.

"Oh, yes," went on the bride. "I've been through my husband's desk and have read all his old love letters. I found several very affectionate letters from you, and I enjoyed reading them really ever so much."

"I'm so glad you enjoyed them," replied the other. "But do come and see me very soon. Here is my card. I have the answers to all those letters, and you might like to read them as well. Mr. X.'s letters are so much more affectionate than those I wrote to him. I know you'll enjoy reading them ever so much more than you did mine."

One Sided.

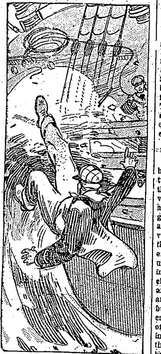
Mr. T.—I think I shall give up my business, my dear. I might as well have some enjoyment out of my money. Mrs. T.—Oh, not yet, Samuel! But when one of us dies I intend to give up housekeeping and see a little of the world.—Illustrated Bits.

Death In Tempest

The Biarritz Was Lashed by Storm and Hurricane In the Pacific.

Driven Out of Her Course, the Ship Encountered Both the Rigors of Winter and the Hot Sun of the Tropics.

Death rode in the tempest and lashed and scourged the French ship Biarritz for days and days. It lurked in the hungry seas that hounded the vessel. It stalked the decks in the guise of lingering disease. Its shadow was ever present. For 170 endless days the Biarritz was a "horror ship," where men fought the raging elements and the ravages of a pestilence. First came the wrath of the sea, then the black hand of scurvy, and in the end came more storms to pursue the stricken ship to the very gate of the harbor.



THE FIRST MATE WAS CARRIED OVER THE SIDE.

Four of the crew of the Biarritz were ill with the scurvy when the vessel dropped anchor. All were haggard and pinched and the the looks of men who had suffered hardships untold. Some clamored for food; others, in the first clutches of disease, were too weak to drag their tired bodies along the deck.

With coal from Cardiff the Biarritz set sail for the California coast. Off Cape Horn the battle for life began. Hurricanes that came from all points of the compass drove the vessel far from her course. Time and again she was thrown on her beam ends with lee rail submerged. Lifeboats were crushed by the sea like eggshells. The decks, galley and forecastle were the playgrounds for the seething waves. Ruin was spread everywhere by the salt water.

For forty-five days the gales tossed the vessel, and during those trying days Captain Robinot and his men worked tirelessly. The skipper matched his skill against the fury of the elements, and in the end he won.

And in the midst of their struggles the men were compelled to suffer the rigors of winter in the antarctic zone. Blinding snowstorms were of frequent occurrence. The lines and rigging of the ship were coated with ice, and the frostbitten hands of the sailors attest the sufferings they underwent. Then, too, say the men, the supply of water ran short, and they shoveled the snow from the forecastle head to fill the tanks again.

Out of the snows and storms of the antarctic the Biarritz sailed into the sleepy calm of the tropics. There the scurvy attacked the men. For days the ship rolled idly with sails hanging slack. The hot sun beat down on deck with merciless glare. The men drank the tepid water and ate of the salt food. They fought and grumbled in their idleness. They felt the disease coming on and cried out for more and better food.

Then the wind came and the ship sailed out of the doldrums. The strength of the men was renewed, and all but four of them returned to their tasks. With fair winds the ship foamed northward until off the California coast. The gales swooped down on the ship again. In the heavy storm the vessel narrowly escaped being driven on the rocks of the Mendocino coast. The seas that swept the decks carried everything before them. The first mate was picked up and carried over the side. He managed to grasp a rope and was hauled back on deck again.

Cheated of their prey, the elements harassed the ship until she reached the shelter of the San Francisco harbor. When coming over the bar the seas were so heavy that it required four men to keep the vessel on her course.

The men complained to the federal officers who boarded the vessel of the treatment accorded them. They exhibited bread as black and hard as the iron deck, on which they said they were compelled to subsist.

Corks For Bottle Stoppers.

The application of cork as a bottle stopper for liquid vessels is said to be of great antiquity. The earliest record extant of its use in Europe is that mentioned by Horace, who asserts that the Romans had cork as stoppers for their wine amphorae. Certain of the uses of cork were known to the ancient Greeks and Egyptians, but whether they used cork for stopping the mouths of their liquid vessels history does not say. It was not, however, until the year 1760 that the Spaniards first commenced to work their cork woods with some degree of regularity for the making of corks. Although perhaps corks were more or less in use from the time glass bottles were first invented, which Beckmann asserts to have been in the fifteenth century, yet it was not until two and a half centuries later that the Spaniards began to prepare cork for bottle stoppers, which they did in a fore[illegible]ted at the northeast of the Tig[illegible] of the [illegible]. The cork industry [illegible] since [illegible]lly risen to be one of the [illegible], its chief center in Spain [illegible] Catalonia.

What the Teacher Must Do.

Knowledge is good, but wisdom is better. The college valedictorian, trained to take knowledge in rather than to impart it, may have much of it with but little wisdom. He may be able, as a teacher, to drill boys and girls in Greek and Latin declensions and cram them with facts, useful or valueless, but if he cannot produce in them what Spencer calls "pleasurable excitement" and interest he is a failure. His would be the sort of teaching that harps upon obedience and discipline and endeavors by force of rule and rod to oblige the pupil to study and learn. The will cannot be forced, but the real teacher knows well that it can be led. He remembers the remark of Rousseau that "the teacher's province is less to instruct than to guide;" that "he must not lay down precepts, but teach his pupils to discover them." This was the way of that great teacher, Agassiz, certainly.—Arthur Gilman in Atlantic.

The Small Mouthed Bass.

The small mouthed bass fully deserves his reputation for being vigorous and gamy from infancy. He is extremely pugnacious by nature and has fighting tactics peculiarly his own which for strength, activity and craft are unequaled. I once took a bass four inches long on a spoon hook, the bowl of which was more than two inches long. This bass does not hesitate to tackle that terror of all other fish—the fierce and voracious pickerel. With his first dorsal fin rigidly set up, he lays off some ten or twenty feet and then makes a rapid dash right into and under the "long face," forcing him to clear out at once or ripping him so badly that he is hors de combat. The fact has been established that bass introduced into a pond containing pickerel will ultimately destroy the latter. The same fate awaits other fish, including trout.—Outing.

Wind Superstitions.

The Finns of Norway long entertained a traditional belief in the power of controlling the winds by a small rope with three knots tied in it. This popular superstition gave rise to the curious industry of making and selling these wind controlling ropes with magical knots to mariners and fishermen. It was believed that by unloosing the first knot a favorable breeze was secured, the second raised a strong gale and if the third knot was untied it would prove the prelude to a tempest. According to Ranulph Higden, the witches of the Isle of Man had a similar ancient practice of selling winds to sailors.

Apt.

Douglas Jerrold had a way of putting pat names to things. One of his remarks is given by George Hodder in "Manners of My Time." Jerrold was at a party one night where a doctor, who was tall and thin almost to emaciation, had for a partner a lady who was short and square in build. Turning to a bystander, he remarked, "There is a mile dancing with a milestone."

When Labor Did Not Tell.

A home missionary who visited Sing Sing prison took occasion to have a heart to heart talk with one of the convicts.

"Don't you know, my friend," said he, "that crime never brings success? It is only achieved by hard labor."

"I did six months of it at a stretch once, and I didn't come out no richer than I went in."

He Was Spurned.

"Believe me," said old Gotrox, "although I'm an old bachelor I'm sure I could learn to be a good husband. You know, a man is never too old to learn."

"Nor too old to yearn, perhaps," replied Miss Pechis; "also I'm sorry to say you're not too old to spurn."—Philadelphia Press.

Always Something Lacking.

Love is like a waltz. It never quite fulfills all one expects of it. Either the man's lead is too fast or too slow, his hold too light or too loose, he stumbles over your gown or steps on your feet, and if everything else is right it is the wrong man.—Life.

That in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience with women's diseases covers a great many years.

Mrs. Pinkham is the daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, and for many years under her direction, and since her decease, she has been advising sick women free of charge.

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing full well that they ought to have immediate assistance, but a natural modesty impels them to shrink from exposing themselves to the questions and probable examinations of even their family physician. It is unnecessary. Without money or price you can consult a woman whose knowledge from actual experience is great.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women only. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established the eternal confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Out of the vast volume of experience which she has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge that will help your case. She asks nothing in return except your good-will, and her advice has relieved thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.

If you are ill, don't hesitate to get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once, and write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for special advice.

When a medicine has been successful in restoring to health so many women, you cannot well say, without trying it, "I do not believe it will help me."

"He carved out his own fortune." "Nonsense! He married it." "Well, he had to cut out a lot of other fellows, didn't he?"

"Are you one of the expert witnesses?" inquired the court officer. "I am," answered the high financier. I've been on the stand two hours and haven't told 'em a thing."

"I have been misquoted," said the new congressman. "Well," answered the experienced statesman, "wait and see how it turns out. Sometimes a man is lucky to be misquoted."

GET RID OF THE GAS

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Strengthen the Stomach and Enable It to Do Its Work.

When the stomach is feeble the food lies in it undigested, decays and throws off poisonous gases that distend the walls of the stomach and cause interference with other organs, especially with the action of the heart and lungs. These gases have other ill effects. The nerves and the brain are disturbed and discomforts such as dizziness, hot flashes, sleeplessness, irritableness and despondency originate from this source.

Experience shows that these troubles vanish just as soon as the stomach is made strong enough to digest the food. In other words, it needs a tonic that will rouse it to do the work of changing the food into nourishment.

Miss Minerva O. Ladd, of Ipswich, Mass., says: "I had a weak stomach from the time I was a little child. Whenever I took hearty food it would cause terrible faintness, and I would finally vomit what I had eaten. At times there would be the most intense pains through the upper part of my body. For days in succession I would have to lie down most of the time. The distress was often so great that I could hardly bear it, and the frequent and violent belching spells were very disagreeable, too.

"My doctor's medicines gave me little relief and it was not until I tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that I found a cure. Within three weeks a decided improvement was noticeable. The belching spells were less frequent, the pains through my body were not so intense, my food was retained and after taking the pills for a few weeks longer I found that I was altogether free from the miseries I had so long suffered."

Every dyspeptic should read "What to Eat and How to Eat." Write the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., for a free copy.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Prize for Farmers.

Duluth.—The Great Northern road is making a special effort to interest the farmers of Northern Minnesota in the farm contest prizes that are offered by J. J. Hill. The conditions under which the awards are to be made will depend on how well tilled and managed the farms are. Those that are highest in these respects will get the prizes, which run from $300 down to $75 in cash. These three prizes will apply to seven sections of Minnesota, and the farmers of North and South Dakota are also offered premiums in like amounts. The total offered by Mr. Hill is about $8,000.

Farmers are to make entries in April, and the judging will be done in June, July and August by Prof. Thos. Shaw and competent assistants. It is expected that the farmers of the territory immediately tributary to Duluth will take an interest in the competition and strive to win prizes. The competition plan that Mr. Hill has inaugurated will draw much favorable attention to the countries in which are located the prize winning farms.

Ditch Petition Granted.

St. Cloud.—The county board has granted a petition for a drainage ditch in the town of St. Augusta, which is to be five miles in length, and is expected to reclaim about 1,000 acres of land. Several months ago the farmers of St. Augusta petitioned for a ditch similar to the present project, but of greater length. Some of the property owners along the proposed route objected, however, alleging that the benefits to be assessed were excessive. An appeal was taken from the order of the county board and all proceedings under this project were ended. Now it is proposed to construct a shorter drain and have a reassessment of benefits, which is hoped to overcome the difficulties that delayed the construction of the first drain.

Unusual Compliment.

Minnesota Lake.—The village of Minnesota Lake, Minn., elected Peter Kremer president of the council for the twenty-third consecutive term by a majority so large as to be almost unanimous. There are perhaps few parallel cases in the United States. Minnesota Lake is a flourishing little village, and under Mr. Kremer's regime it has grown from a few tumble-down shacks to substantial brick blocks, with stocks of merchandise of every kind rivaling towns many times its size. It has nicely graveled and graded streets, cement gutters, miles of cement walks, a fine system of waterworks, excellent sewage system and not a cent of indebtedness, bonded or otherwise.

Quail Distributed.

St. Paul.—A second lot of quail was received by Sam Fulerton, agent of the state game and fish commission. Forty-eight birds were received last week and divided between St. Peter and Norwood. Fifty-two were received in the last lot.

Some of them will be sent to Mankato, and the rest to points north along the Soo line. The board ordered twelve dozen of the birds from Alabama and there are about four dozen more coming.

Since the first consignment of birds was received a week ago, Mr. Fullerton has been receiving dozens of letters asking for birds for distribution.

Carnegie's Gift.

Hamline.—The announcement that Andrew Carnegie has selected Hamline university as the object of one of his library donations will cause general gratification, in spite of the fact that his offer of $30,000 is, as is usual with his gifts, conditioned on the raising of an equal amount. In this case the $30,000 to be raised is to form an endowment fund to insure the proper maintenance of the building. This gift and the condition attached to it have both a local and a general bearing. It should appeal to the people of St. Paul and of the whole Northwest.

Loans by State.

Loans aggregating $34,750 were made by the state investment board out of the state school and university funds. The city of Warren gets $12,000 for use in municipal buildings. Independent School District No. 1 of Fairmont, Martin county, gets $8,000 for a new school building, and District No. 23 of Walnut Grove, Redwood county, gets $13,000. District 93 of Swift county gets $850, District 228 of Otter Tail gets $700, and District 269 of Otter Tail gets $200.

News in Brief.

St. Paul.—The aldermen pass a resolution requiring better service on the Snelling line.

Minneapolis.—The Great Northern and the Northern Pacific will make joint use of their tracks to St. Cloud.

St. Paul.—Mat Jackles, 260 West Third street, is arrested on a charge of attempting to shoot his wife.

St. Paul.—Leo L. Brandt, during a runaway near the Union depot, receives injuries that may be fatal.

Minneapolis.—The state dairy commissioner starts a campaign to improve the quality of the cream in Minnesota.

Minneapolis.—Minnesotans are asked to assist in securing the establishment of a children's bureau at Washington.

St. Paul.—Frank De Mars pleaded guilty to the theft of a quantity of wood valued at about $100 at New Brighton, and was sentenced to the reformatory by Judge Bunn in the district court.

St. Paul.—Junior medical students at State University may be boycotted by St. Paul city hospital.

St. Paul.—O. C. Gregg, superintendent of the state farmers' institute, yesterday turned into the state treasury $1,508.60 received for advertising in the farmers' institute annual for the present season.

Inver Grove.—In a struggle with a mad bull, James McDermott, Jr., son of James McDermott, a farmer, had a narrow escape from death. The young man tried a Quo Vadis performance until his brother, John, came to the rescue with a butcher knife and cut the beast's throat.

GREAT SCOTT.

The Biggest Man of Addison County, Vt., Tells an Interesting Story.

E. E. Scott, meat dealer, Vergennes, Vt., Past Commander of Ethan Allen Post, G. A. R. says: "A severe attack of typhoid left me with weak kidneys. Every night I had to get up frequently to pass the urine, which was ropy, dark and very painful to void. I had no appetite, but drank water continually without being able to quench my thirst. Terrible headaches and dizzy spells oppressed me and my back was lame, sore and stiff. A month's treatment with Doan's Kidney Pills rid me of this trouble, and now I am strong and healthy and weigh 230 pounds. I give the credit to Doan's Kidney Pills."

DISFIGURED WITH ECZEMA.

Brushed Scales from Face Like Powder—Under Physicians Grew Worse—Cuticura Works Wonders.

"I suffered with eczema six months. I had tried three doctors, but did not get any better. It was on my body and on my feet so thick that I could hardly put a pin on me without touching eczema. My face was covered, my eyebrows came out, and then it got in my eye. I then went to another doctor. He asked me what I was taking for it, and I told him Cuticura. He said that was a very good thing, but that he thought that my face would be marked for life. But Cuticura did its work, and my face is now just as clear as it ever was. I told all my friends about my remarkable cure. I feel so thankful I want everybody far and wide to know what Cuticura can do. It is a sure cure for eczema. WASHINGTON GOSSIP

TWO CONGRESSMEN CONSPICUOUS AS FRIENDLY ENEMIES.

GROSVENOR AND CLARK.

Navy Disapproves Frequent Changes in That Department—New Men to Break In—Knox Declines Honor.

WASHINGTON.—Congress is going to lose one of its Most picturesque figures. Gen. Grosvenor of Ohio, who for 20 years has been a conspicuous leader on the Republican side, has been defeated for renomination. He has been tendered the nomination in another Ohio district, but has declined, as he does not believe in going away from home for honors. There is genuine regret among all the old members of the house, Democrats as well as Republicans, at the retirement of Gen. Grosvenor.

No one will miss the gallant old fighter more than that dyed-in-the-wool Democrat, Champ Clark, of Missouri. Two stronger partisans than these men could not be found in congress. They have crossed swords scores of times, not only on the floor of the house but on Chautauqua platforms, where they have been star attractions. They have differed on nearly every important question that has been before congress in the last ten years, and have paid each other many left-handed compliments in the heat of debate, but they are warm friends personally.

Often after an unusually caustic encounter between these worthies on the floor, when the proprieties of debate were strained to the limit, they would be seen walking up and down the lobby in the rear of the house chuckling over their performance and probably arranging the details of a future joint debate on some Chautauqua circle.

A Third Term.

GEN. GROSVENOR is signlizing his last days in congress by advocating a third term for Theodore Roosevelt. He has come out in more than one strong interview declaring that this theory that no man should have more than two terms as president is "all rot." He says that George Washington did not set down any hard and fast rule when he decided not to have a third term, but he merely declared his own personal preference. He was tired of the job.

Gen. Grosvenor's talk of a third term has attracted more than ordinary attention because of his prominence as a Republican leader. He has maintained a place in the front rank of political prophets since the election of the fifty-fourth congress, when he predicted an overwhelming majority for his party and gave the figures. Since then he has been known in the political world as "Old Figures." The old general took the credit for that prediction, but it really belonged to a newspaper man named John Kennedy.

The wily old politician stood for the figures all right, and as they came out remarkably close to the actual result his reputation as a prognosticator was at once established. He did the right thing by Kennedy, however, as he had the latter appointed as a member of the celebrated industrial commission, which sat for several years collecting all sorts of data about economic conditions in the country and whose report, in 19 volumes, adorns the library of congress and various reference libraries throughout the land. As a commissioner Mr. Kennedy drew $5,000 a year for several years, which was pretty fair recompense.

A Practice of the President.

THE navy department is beginning to be considered the "trying out" place for cabinet officers. It is now the intention of the president to transfer Secretary Bonaparte from the navy department to the office of attorney general of the United States. In this transfer he will be following the example he set when he took Attorney General Moody out of the navy and put him at the head of the department of justice. Some of the officers of the navy are inclined to criticize the practice of President Roosevelt of putting a man at the head of that department until a vacancy occurs in some other department that will suit the man better. They claim it is not giving the navy a square deal. They maintain that a man just gets to understand the needs of the navy and to be in touch with its officers when he is taken away and a new man has to be broken in. This change means more to the navy than it would to the army, for the latter has a general staff which can guide a new secretary.

Moody was just getting interested in the navy when he was made attorney general. Bonaparte is just beginning to understand the administration of the department when word comes that he will soon be asked to succeed Mr. Moody in the department of justice. Ambassador Meyer at St. Petersburg will, in all possibility, succeed Bonaparte. Mr. Meyer has had about all the diplomatic experience he wants as ambassador to Rome and then to St. Petersburg. He is very wealthy and has been able to make a good showing as our representative, but he has a hankering after official life in Washington, where his wealth will enable him to cut a wide swath. Mr. Moody wants to retire to private practice and make a fortune, which he, with his talents and experience, will doubtless do. Mr. Bonaparte takes a great deal more interest in the law than he does in the navy.

Offered the Woolsack.

IT IS said that Caesar thrice refused a crown. It is almost as rare for a lawyer who has attained wealth and reputation to refuse a seat upon the supreme bench of the United States, and yet that is what Senator Knox of Pennsylvania has done, not only once, but three times, as did Caesar when offered a crown.

The third offer to Knox came the day President Roosevelt received a note from Associate Justice Brown that the latter would retire at the end of the present court session, which will be in May. Within an hour Mr. Roosevelt sent for Knox. The latter was in a theater. "The first time I have been at a matinee for years," he said to the president, "and I got caught." The tender was made, but Mr. Knox said he could not accept, as his duty laid in the senate to serve Pennsylvana.

The first offer of the wool sack came when Associate Justice Shiras retired some two years ago. Mr. Knox was then attorney general and interested in the prosecution of the Northern Securities cases. He was constrained to decline. Shortly afterward Associate Justice Harlan offered to retire if the president would appoint Mr. Knox. Mr. Roosevelt was willing, and Mr. Harlan was entitled to retirement, both on account of age and service. Mr. Knox vetoed the proposition, saying that he would never be a party to the retirement of John M. Harlan from the supreme bench. He believed that the court needed such men as Harlan.

The Noble Red Man.

ONE of the familiar sights in Washington, especially during a session of congress, is the "blanket" Indian. A group of aborigines parading down Pennsylvania avenue in their native regalia of blankets and feathers is so commonplace that even the curious little negroes scarcely turn to look at them. The "noble red man" comes often to Washington to see the "Great White Father" and get a few more favors. He knows that he will attract attention if he wears bright blankets and fancy moccasins and leggins. He manages to have a pretty good time while here and finds his surroundings much more comfortable than in a smoky and drafty tepee at home.

The Indian visitors here make a certain hostelry their stopping place. It is a comfortable hotel run by a man named Beveridge. "I suppose I have met more Indians of more different tribes than any other man in the United States," said Mr. Beveridge the other day, "and I've never been a hundred miles away from Washington."

Among the noted Indians who have been the guests at Mr. Beveridge's hotel was the famous embassy of Sioux that came to make a treaty after the Custer massacre. In the party were the celebrated chiefs, Red Cloud, Spotted Tail, Young-Man-Afraid-Of-His-Horses and Crazy Horse. Some of the warriors talked freely about that horrible affair. Mr. Beveridge gained the idea that old Crazy Horse was the real leader in that battle, although Sitting Bull got the credit. The latter was only a "Medicine Man." The warriors knew, however, that the man who conceived the plan to entrap Custer was none other than John Gall. He was the oblest of their chiefs.

MINNESOTA ITEMS.

St. Paul.—The Northern Pacific places orders for extensive equipment.

Kansas City.—Sanford W. Devoe, a retired business man of Minneapolis, died here.

Minneapolis.—Detectives of the Minneapolis and St. Paul police forces were called on to act as nurses when a babe was deserted in each city.

Washington.—A bill was introduced by Representative Fletcher today providing for the erection at Fort Snelling of an armory and arsenal.

Crookston.—Mrs. George Q. Erskin, wife of one of the founders, and until recently president of the First National bank at Fargo, was burned to death.

Winona.—Chicken and squab raising on a large scale is to be undertaken in Winona, the enterprise being backed by E. L. King of the J. R. Watkins Medical company.

Duluth.—Sixteen inches of ice bars the passage of boats in the river at the Sault and Mud Lake, and the eyes of all vesselmen at the Head of the Lakes are turned in that direction.

Austin.—Contracts were signed today for 16,817 square yards of paving, comprising twelve blocks of brick and one of creosote, and covering all the business districts of Austin.

St. Paul Park.—Alfred Anderson, a factory hand, was killed by a train two miles west of town, and his mangled body was found by a Hopkins policeman yesterday afternoon.

Duluth.—The local naval militia is making active preparations for the maneuvers which have been authorized by the navy department, to take place on the Great Lakes from Aug. 5 to 10 next.

Minneapolis.—Through co-operation with the new department of dairy inspection to be established in New York by the department of agriculture, Dairy Commissioner Slater, of Minnesota, expects to be able to materially benefit Minnesota dairy interests.

Owatonna.—The Metropolitan Opera house, valued at $35,000, was damaged by fire to the extent of $4,000. The fire started in the scenery, although the exact place is not known, and is supposed to have been incendiary.

Duluth.—A farmer named Antti Kallinen, 50 years of age, walked into an open pit on the Commodore mine location at Virginia late Sunday night, and today his dead body was found at the bottom, 35 feet from the surface. Death resulted instantly, for his head was crushed. Kalleinen, whose farm is six miles from Virginia, came to town to visit a daughter.

Welcome.—At a meeting held to vote on the question of issuing bonds in the sum of $11,000 for the purpose of building a new school house, 78 votes were cast, 75 being in favor of the bonds and 3 against them. This will give Welcome a chance to build a high school. Bids for a new school will be called for at once.

Minneapolis.—E. T. Hamlin, employed in an office on the third floor of the Corn Exchange, narrowly escaped being killed by a rifle ball. While he was sitting at his desk writing a bullet crashed through the window, passed through his hair and buried itself in the opposite wall.

St. Peter.—Lid stock jumped several points here last night. It was the formal opening of the campaign inaugurated by the Citizens' League to secure strict enforcement of the state law as applied to the retail liquor traffic, and Rev. Father Cleary of Minneapolis, the first speaker ever brought to this city for a municipal compaign, made a powerful address.

St. Paul.—Attorney General E. T. Young has reaffirmed the opinion given two years ago by Former Attorney General W. B. Douglas, that street railway lines, even if built outside the limits of any city, do not come under the jurisdiction of the state railway commission, and that it has no power to receive complaints or make orders regarding service and charges.

Milwaukee.—"My name is Frank Bradley, and my home used to be at St. Paul. I have no home there now. Bad health is the cause of this." Illegibly scribbled on a scrap of paper, this message was found in the possession of a man who shot himself Saturday night at the Chicago House, 214 Wells street.

Harmony.—A company has been organized in this county for the purpose of conducting lumber operations in Eastern Missouri. The company is capitalized at $75,000 and will be known as the Northwestern Land, Lumber & Iron Company. Hon. O. N. Thundale of Harmony is president.

La Crescent.—Grief over the death of her husband a month ago caused the death of Catherine Smith aged eighty-nine years. Her husband, Joseph Smith, was the oldest postmaster in point of continuous service in the United States, having held the office at La Crescent for over forty cansecutive years.

Motley.—Pat Holly, living seven miles northwest of here, was found this afternoon murdered and buried in a pile of refuse at a stable. His team and sled were found two miles northwest of Motley in Case county. The team had been wandering around and got fast in the timber brush.

Nashwauk.—The efforts of a "ghost" to drive George Hammond and his family from their claim on Bear river ended in ignominious failure. A crushing blow floored the apparation and caused it to take its departure from the Hammond homestead forever.

Duluth.—Paul F. Bolieau, a cornice worker, employed by Lewis Helling & Co., of Duluth, received news today that he is a wealthy man as a result of the discovery of his late father's will. The news came in a letter from a sister, Mrs. E. Straube, of Los Angeles.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

This year does not have the appearnace of being as favorable to county seat removal scraps as last year as mud will not be so plentiful as it was last year.

There is a good prospect that Congressman Steenerson will get his drainage bill passed at this session of congress which will add another plum to his ability as our congressman from the 9th, district of Minnesota.

Judge Watts decided last week at Red Lake Falls that the order from which the Red Lake Falls attorneys had appealed to the supreme court could not be appealed. This throws down the bars and we may expect a county seat scrap in the near future.

The coal miners and operators have got their machine for pulling the leg of the public in working order, at last for a good and strong pull. Talk about government ownership of railroads, but the first and most important piece of property that they ought to own and operate are the coal mines of Amearica.

Altho we are residents of Red Lake county, yet we take some interest in our old home county politics in Polk county, and the latest is that Torkel Hoiland the Legby politician is going to run on the Socialist ticket for sheriff next fall. We just thought we would mention this for fear Gonyea might not hear about it before election.

There is some talk about the rapid gains being made by the Socialist party in the United States, but we are quite sure they have not become numerous enouguh tobe considered worthyof notice. But when you begin to see the old office seekers, that have been kicked out of the old parties begin to gather around them like fly's around the bung hole of an old molasses barrel, then it will be time to begin to consider them a party that are liable to be a winner.

There is some talk of St.Hilare and Plummer taking a hand in the county seat scrap and making an attempt to steal the cheese while the cats are fighting. We only hope that Rhoda and High Landing will not get mixed up in the muss, as that would bring us in, and as we have had several years hard drilling on county seat scraps (and got the worst of it at last by his oner the supreme court), we would prefer to go way back and sit down and let others have all the honor and glory they can get out of it.

That some good changes are being made by congress is evident from the fact that the house committee on agriculture has had the courage, though by a small majority, to cut out the antiquated practice of distributing garden seeds to rural constituents of congressmen. When the country under cultivation consisted of an area little larger than a few states and agriculture needed stimulation, it was well. That period no longer exists. Nor is it necessary that congress should distribute experimental seeds to the farmers, for there are established in all states and territorys experimental stations where tests can be better made and the results obtained with greater accuracy and less cost than by a general distribution. The original purpose was to experiment with new seeds, and parties receiving them were expected to care for them and report results. The distribution of seeds dates from the formation of the department of agriculture in 1862. So many able-bodied men were in the army that agriculture needed encouragement to provide food for those at the front. The necessity has long since passed away. The money thus spent had better be used in the line of rural mails or other up-to date enterprises. Any farmer can obtain from the experiment stations all the results of trials of new seed.

DEATH OF A. W. SHOSTEN.

A. W. Shusten, of Highlanding accidently shot and instantly killed himself four miles south of Kratka on Saturday last, He was on his way home from St. Hilaire and had stoped for the night with some of his bachellor friends, and they were celebrating their friendship over a "jug" and after they had stoped to rest one of the party says Mr. Shuston was sitting on the floor and fell asleep leaning against the wall, and sometime during the night he awakened and spoke to him and not receiving any answer went over and took hold of him and found he was dead, having either by accident or design shot himself with a revolver which he had in his possession, the ball entering his forehead and passing out at the top of his head. No blame seems to be attacked to any one for the accident and particulars are very hard to obtain, as the whole party were under the influence of liquor. The remains were brought home Sunday and funeral services held at his residence on Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Shuston leaves a wife and five small children in moderate circumstances to mourn his death, who have the sympathy of the entire neighborhood in their late bereavement.

Contrasted Types.

The outspoken romance of the German is sometimes trying to those of a different habit. The author of the traveling notes called "From a Holiday Journal" describes a young girl whom she met at a German bath, a pretty, doll-like creature, named Marie, who knew how to sit still and do nothing all day long.

Presently it was discovered that Marie had a lover. She disclosed the fact boldly.

"My brautigam is young, handsome, rich," she said proudly, looking up to a tall English girl of seventeen. "And have you not a bridegroom too? Or did you never have one?"

The English girl had never before felt the humiliation caused by the lack of a bridegroom. So she shamefacedly confessed that some one liked her, only this spring, but—

"But you do not love him," interrupted the German girl in loud but very bad English. "Oh, I love my treasure so! I love him so!"

The English girl shuddered and blushed to the roots of her hair. The words had been distinctly spoken and had evidently proved very amusing to a party of English in the vicinity.

"Oh," she implored, "would you mind saying 'like' instead of 'love' next time? We never say 'love' in English. We have no such thing!"

How She Died.

A minor poet who talked of his lady's person being "curiously mix'd" would not be enthusiastically reviewed nowadays. But so startlingly beautiful was the lady in question, one Susanna Perwich, who died of rheumatic fever at Hackney on July 3, 1661, "in the flower of her age," that these lines in praise of her have not only been preserved, but they have even escaped classification with nonsense verse. This explanation is, perhaps, necessary before quoting the inspired account of her death:

Behold, damp sheets
Cling close about her in the bed,
At which she, waking, said, "I'm dead!"
Shall I the careless maid go blame
And tell her what a horrid shame
It is that by her negligence
So choice a one is lost from hence?

—London Chronicle.

Dancing.

It is quite usual after a ball to find that the action of the heart shows traces of fatigue, particularly in delicate young women, who complain of a vague sensation of uneasiness, sadness and even of pain and are, in a word, in a peculiar condition that is not yet disease, nor is it health—much nearer the former than the latter. Diseases caused by dancing are commoner in women than in men. The most frequent are laryngitis, particularly in women who talk a great deal while dancing; colds, bronchitis and sometimes, pneumonia and pleurisy. Dancing should be absolutely forbidden in all cases of consumption, which may assume a very rapid form from this cause. It is counter indicated as well in all cases of heart trouble.

Hints About Screws.

Where screws are driven into soft wood and subjected to considerable strain they are very likely to work loose, and it is often difficult to make them hold. In such cases the use of glue is profitable. Make the glue thick. Immerse a stick about half the size of the screw and put it into the hole. Then put in the screw and drive it home as quickly as possible. When there is an article of furniture to be hastily repaired and no glue is at hand, bore a hole, insert the stick, fill the rest of the cavity with pulverized rosin, then heat the screw sufficiently to melt the rosin as it is driven in. Where screws are driven into wood for temporary purposes they can be more easily removed by dipping them in oil before inserting. When buying screws, notice that the heads are small and well cut, that there are no flaws in the body or thread part and that they have gimlet points. A screw of good make will drive as easily into oak as others into pine and will endure having twice the force brought against it.

Pushing the Old Folks Aside.

When the babies are cross and a man would like a quiet retreat there is none for him. But in a few years, when the children are grown and he is in the way, the daughters and mother put their heads together and originate a den. There is no den for the mother because she gracefully eliminates herself by sitting in the kitchen or running over to a neighbor's. It is her natural disposition to hide in a corner, or remove herself entirely, and it is not the natural disposition of the father; hence the den. It has a couch and some pipes and tobacco and the books which the neighbors haven't got around to borrowing as yet, though if father begins a story today the book will be found to be loaned out when he wants to finish it tomorrow. The den is a fashionable way of pushing the old man out. If there is one in your house, Mr. Man, don't be deceived.—Atchison Globe.

Honors Easy.

People who were present smiled at the little passage of arms which took place between two young ladies at a luncheon recently. One of them, a bride, shaking hands in her characteristically cordial way, said to the other: "I'm so glad to meet you! You have afforded me so very much amusement just lately."

"Amusement?" said the other.

"Oh, yes," went on the bride. "I've been through my husband's desk and have read all his old love letters. I found several very affectionate letters from you, and I enjoyed reading them really ever so much."

"I'm so glad you enjoyed them," replied the other. "But, do come and see me very soon. Here is my card. I have the answers to all those letters, and you might like to read them as well. Mr. X.'s letters are so much more affectionate than those I wrote to him. I know you'll enjoy reading them ever so much more than you did mine."

Two Odd Volumes.

The book done by a French monk who instead of writing the words cut the letters from the vellum page and formed a sort of stencil has its opposite in a Swedish translation of the four gospels, which was done in gold and silver leaf. The initial letters are cut from thin sheets of beaten gold done in delicate tracery, while the body of the text is of heavy silver. The foil is cemented to the parchment page with an adhesive which in spite of the undoubted antiquity of the book has not lost its powers. Most freak books were evidently done to perpetuate the name of the ingenious owner, but this carries absolutely no information as to its maker.

A more modern freak is the output of a Lyons silk weaving firm and is a prayer book in which the letters are woven into the silk. But one copy was made of the book, and this is in the government library at Paris.

Starboard and Port.

Why do the sailors call the right hand side of the ship "starboard" and the left hand "port?" For the answer it is necessary to go back to the days of the Norsemen and Saxons. In the viking ships the warriors hung the "bords," or shields, on the side of the ship above the places for their oars. The viking himself held the steer oar, which was fastened to the right hand side of the stern. Thus the right hand side of the ship became known as the steer side, and as the bords of the warriors were hung there it was called the "steerbord," or starboard side, while the lower, or lurking side, became the larboard. Bord eventually became corrupted into port.

Oluf Snoback returned home from Furgus Falls Sunday evening, where he wascalledthe first of last week by the searious illness of his mother. He reports that she was on the road to recovery when he left for home.

The material for the new black smith shop at Rhoda arrived the past week, and work upon the new building will be commenced soon and farmers in this vicinity may save long distant travels when they can get their work done at home.

Owning to the inability to cross the Red Lake River the farmers boat meeting which was to have been held at Kratka, on Wednesday April 4th was adjourned until Saturday April 14th and all share holders are requested to be present on that date as it is the last final meeting.

Carl Jensen, the Kratka Merchant had the misfortune to loose his team of horses, last Friday evening while on his way home from Thief River Falls, with a load of store goods on the Red Lake River, as the ice is decaying very fast during the recent warm weather, this would be a warning for others to keep off the river whither by team or foot.

The Verdict.

Records of the ancient city of Gorgeana, founded in 1640, better known at the present time as York Harbor, Me., contain many quaint and unusual stories of the early life of the town.

At the entrance to York harbor a bold promontory known as Stage neck extends some distance into the sea, from which formerly in stormy weather a temporary light in the form of a lantern hoisted upon an upright pole was displayed as a warning to mariners.

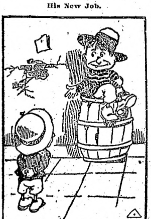
One dark winter night a sloop was wrecked on these rocks. A survivor on being questioned about the catastrophe said:

"The vessel struck, turned over on her side, and the skipper and another barrel of whisky rolled overboard."

The local coroner was summoned, and this somewhat startling verdict was returned:

"We find that the deceased fell from the masthead and was killed. He rolled overboard and was drowned. He floated ashore and froze to death, and the rats eat him up alive!"—Harper's Weekly.

His New Job.



Jimmie—I got a new job now. I'm workin' in a big watch factory.

Teddy—Watcher doin'? Makin' faces?

Blessing the River.

In the little Balkan state of Roumania it has been the custom from time immemorial for towns by the river Danube to keep the Christmas feast by a peculiar ceremony called "blessing the river." This used to be carried out on a scaffolding erected on the frozen river, but owing to an accident, when the ice broke, and hundreds of people were drowned, it is now held upon the bank. The people wear turbans of colored paper and carry long, white wands. Some are dressed to represent Biblical characters. The service, conducted by priests, lasts about half an hour, and then the ice is broken and a small wooden cross thrown into the water. Then people rush into the icy river after this emblem, and the person who secures it is supposed to be assured of great good luck for the coming year.

Disappointment on Both Sides.

"You said the house was only five minutes' walk from the station," complained the victim. "To say the least, I'm disappointed in you."

"And I'm disappointed in you," replied the agent. "I thought you were a very rapid walker."—Philadelphia Press.

Beyond Reason.

There be two individuals who cannot be reasoned with—a girl in love and a man who is determined to run for an office.—New Orleans Picayune.

Love is never afraid of overwork.—Chicago Tribune.

Diet and Digestion.

Abstemiousness in diet is very conducive to a good digestion. It is preferable to be a little underfed than at all overfed. Hence we come to one of the first causes of indigestion in the adult, too large a quantity of food. After an ordinary meal the food should all have left the stomach by the end of six or seven hours. If owing to an excessive quantity the stomach cannot deal with the amount some food remains in the stomach and ferments. This creates discomfort, pain, wind, nausea and perhaps vomiting, by means of which the abused stomach gets rid of its burden. If the sufferer is not thus fortunately sick the best thing he can do is to drink a large tumbler of lukewarm water, which will probably induce vomiting and so wash out the stomach. Half a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda added to the fluid will cause still more relief. During the next twenty-four hours the lightest diet, such as a little tea and dried toast, some boiled rice, a little arrowroot or corn flour, should be taken.

Chotohazree at the Gymkhana.

In "Modern India" the author, William Eleroy Curtis, records his meeting with the word gymkhana and "ventures to say that nobody who has not been in India can guess what that means."

And if you want another conundrum, what is a chotohazree? It is customary for smart people to have their chotohazree at the gymkhana, and I think you would be pleased to join them after taking the beautiful drive which leads to the place. Nobody knows where the word was derived from, but it is used to describe a country club—a bungalow hidden under a beautiful grove on the brow of a cliff that overhangs the bay—with all of the appurtenances, golf links, cricket grounds, racket courts and indoor gymnasium, and everybody stops there on an afternoon drive to have chotohazree, which is the local term for afternoon tea and for early morning coffee.

Winding Your Watch.

The old superstitious belief that you will change your luck if you stop winding your watch at night and wind it in the morning may have some slight basis in fact, according to a jeweler, who says that the morning is the proper time to do the winding. This is not only because the hour of rising is for the average man much more regular than that for retiring, but even the soberest and most orderly of men are apt to relax and prone to carelessness at bedtime, when more or less worn by the wear and tear of the day. In this condition the winding is apt to be done in a jerky, irregular sort of way or too far or not far enough. "Nine people out of ten wind their watches on going to bed," said the jeweler, "but if they would do it when they get up, at some regular point in the process of making their toilet, they would do it much better."—Philadelphia Record.

Curious Almshouse.

The most curious almshouse in England is St. Mary's hospital at Chichester. There eight old ladies live actually in the church, which is a fine old building dating from 1680. It was originally a monastery, but when Queen Elizabeth came to visit there she turned it into an almshouse to endure as long as almshouses exist. The old ladies have two neat little rooms each down the sides of the main church, with windows looking out on the garden. They have each a coal supply, a kitchen range, water and gas. At one end of the church is the chapel, where daily services are held. The choir stalls are beautifully carved old oak, the original seats that the monks used. The church stands in a quiet little square.

Too Serious.

While a great many persons probably take themselves too seriously, entertaining an altogether exaggerated opinion of their ability and worth, not many nowadays go to the extreme length of the German whom the English poet Coleridge met at Frankfort. He always took off his hat when he ventured to speak of himself. Were this practice to become general what a number of people would be permanently bareheaded!

Boarding a Hansom.

Have you ever noticed the right way to get into a hansom when two people are riding? Few persons know what to do. In nine cases out of ten the one who enters first seats himself on the off side. But this is wrong. If, on getting in first, you take the near seat your companion can then enter in ease and comfort, which otherwise he could not.

To Waterproof Canvas.

Scientific American gives this recipe for waterproofing for canvas: Soft soap dissolved in hot water and a solution of iron sulphate added. The sulphuric acid combines with the potash of the soap and the iron oxide is precipitated with the fatty acid as insoluble iron soap. This is washed and dried and mixed with linseed oil.

Masculine.

Mrs. Hix—Mrs. June strikes me as being entirely too masculine for a woman. Mrs. Dix—Yes, indeed. Why, every time she has an ache or a pain she makes as much fuss about it as a man would.

Discretion.

When a man says, "Of course it's no business of mine," it is a sure sign that he is going to do the best he can to make it his business.

Growing Water Lilies From Seed.

Many of the choicest water lilies, even the magnificent Victoria regia, may be grown from seed. For many years the seed of this lily, when brought to this country, failed to germinate.

It was finally found that by bottling the seeds in the water of the river in which they grew they could be transported safely from the waters of the Amazon to the far west. Here the lily is usually grown with bottom heat, as it is very tender. Seeds started in pots in a temperature of 90 degrees will germinate in about two weeks and may be planted out in the open air when the nights have become warm—usually about the 1st of June—and will bloom the same summer, but cannot be carried through the winter, but must be started afresh each season, either by the purchase of plants or the sowing of seed, the latter being, of course, much more economical, as seeds may be purchased for a few nickels apiece, the plants costing as many dollars.—American Homes and Gardens.

How to Tell if Worsted or Woolen Cloths Are Adulterated.

Worsted cloths are less often adulterated than woolens and are more easily detected. A cotton worsted is a lie on the face of it, for the cotton stands out with prominence. But often a cotton thread is twisted with a worsted thread, and to determine its presence it is only necessary to take the twist out of the thread and then examine its component parts.

Cotton, having a long staple, can be carded and combed with wool to be spun into worsted yarn. This is done to cheapen the cost of production. Cotton is carded and spun with wool and shoddy, not so much to cheapen the yarn, for cotton is generally as expensive as some shoddies, but is introduced to give strength or spinning qualities to the stock. In many cases the shoddy is of such short staple that it would not stand the drawing in spinning, and, as it would make the cost of the yarn too high to put in enough wool to give that lacking strength, cotton is put in for this purpose.

The percentage of cotton in a fabric can be determined in this manner: Take a small piece of cloth and weigh it. Now boil it for five minutes in a 5 per cent solution of caustic soda. Take out what is left, and, if any, it is all cotton. The wool will all be dissolved. The percentage of shoddy cannot be determined except by experience.

A cloth or yarn with shoddy in it is easily detected by its feel. Cloth made of all new wool is softer feeling than one containing shoddy, for the latter has lost that new, soft, springy feel peculiar to wool.—American Wool and Cotton Reporter.

Success Prolongs Life.

It is now well known that increased complexity of life with increased expenditure distinctly aids longevity. Luxury, "the fertile parent of a whole family of diseases," modifies it greatly, of course, but this is a manageable factor, says the London Chronicle. We have only to recall personal experience to realize the force of intellectual stimulation. The interest of sport will sustain men without fatigue for distances they otherwise could not traverse. The excitement of strife will often mask the presence of wounds. Self forgetfulness in all the walks of life, under the stress of love, chivalry or accepted duty, doubles human endurance. Success gives new vitality, new powers, and this is another name for new life.

No Notion of Real Trouble.

"I bet I get into more trouble than any man in this state," volunteered the young fellow who had come in the clubhouse. "Nothing in the trouble line overlooks me. Why, I'd be afraid to marry"—

"What! Ain't you married?" ejaculated the red nosed elderly party who was hovering over the gratis lunch. "Boy, you don't know what trouble is."

Liquid Metal Polish.

Take eight ounces of Spanish whiting, which must be perfectly free from grit, and put in one quart of gasoline. Shake up the whiting and gasoline thoroughly. You will notice the whiting settles immediately, leaving the liquid as clear as water. To remedy this and, further, to make it a better polishing agent, add to each quart of the mixture thirty-two drops of oleic acid—no more, no less. Shake again, and the whiting will not settle. Apply to gold, silver, nickel, brass, glass or any kind of metallic surface with a piece of cotton flannel, rubbing well. Polish with a piece of same cloth.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

Waterproofing Dress Goods.

One of the most important processes used for waterproofing dress materials is on the lines of the old alumina process. In this case the factor used is rosin dissolved in a large bulk of petroleum spirit. The fabrics to be proofed are passed through a bath of this solution and dried to drive off the solvent. Following this, the goods are treated by pressing with hot polished metal rollers. This last process melts the small quantity of rosin which is deposited on the cloth and leaves each single fiber with an exceedingly thin film of rosin on it.

Monster Beds.

Though the beds of the royal personages of England were elaborately carved and hung with rich curtains even so late as the Tudor period, it is recorded that King Henry VIII.'s bed contained only straw beneath all its finery. A curious order exists as to precautions to be taken against the possibility of intended mischief to the royal person in the making of the bed, for the usher was to search the straw through with a dagger, "that there be none untruth therein, and to tumble over on the down bed for the better search thereof." The bed of Henry VIII. was nearly eleven feet square, and of even more generous dimensions is the great bed to which Shakespeare refers in a well known passage in "Twelfth Night," which was twelve feet square. This "great bed of Ware" has been a marvel for centuries.

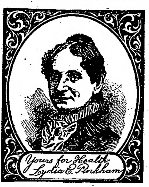
WHO SHE WAS

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF LYDIA E. PINKHAM

And a True Story of How the Vegetable Compound Had Its Birth and How the "Panic of '73" Caused it to be Offered for Public Sale in Drug Stores.

This remarkable woman, whose maiden name was Estes, was born in Lynn, Mass., February 9th, 1819, coming from a good old Quaker family. For some years she taught school, and became known as a woman of an alert and investigating mind, an earnest seeker after knowledge, and above all, possessed of a wonderfully sympathetic nature.



In 1843 she married Isaac Pinkham, a builder and real estate operator, and their early married life was marked by prosperity and happiness. They had four children, three sons and a daughter.

In those good old fashioned days it was common for mothers to make their own home medicines from roots and herbs, nature's own remedies—calling in a physician only in specially urgent cases. By tradition and experience many of them gained a wonderful knowledge of the curative properties of the various roots and herbs.

Mrs. Pinkham took a great interest in the study of roots and herbs, their characteristics and power over disease. She maintained that just as nature so bountifully provides in the harvest-fields and orchards vegetable foods of all kinds; so, if we but take the pains to find them, in the roots and herbs of the field there are remedies expressly designed to cure the various ills and weaknesses of the body, and it was her pleasure to search these out, and prepare simple and effective medicines for her own family and friends.

Chief of these was a rare combination of the choicest medicinal roots and herbs found best adapted for the cure of the ills and weaknesses peculiar to the female sex, and Lydia E. Pinkham's friends and neighbors learned that her compound relieved and cured and it became quite popular among them.

All this so far was done freely, without money and without price, as a labor of love.

But in 1873 the financial crisis struck Lynn. Its length and severity were too much for the large real estate interests of the Pinkham family, as this class of business suffered most from fearful depression, so when the Centennial year dawned it found their property swept away. Some other source of income had to be found.

At this point Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was made known to the world.

The three sons and the daughter, with their mother, combined forces to restore the family fortune. They argued that the medicine which was so good for their woman friends and neighbors was equally good for the women of the whole world.

The Pinkhams had no money, and little credit. Their first laboratory was the kitchen, where roots and herbs were steeped on the stove, gradually filling a gross of bottles. Then came the question of selling it, for always before they had given it away freely. They hired a job printer to run off some pamphlets setting forth the merits of the medicine, now called Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and these were distributed by the Pinkham sons in Boston, New York, and Brooklyn.

The wonderful curative properties of the medicine were, to a great extent, self-advertising, for whoever used it recommended it to others, and the demand gradually increased.

In 1877, by combined efforts the family had saved enough money to commence newspaper advertising and from that time the growth and success of the enterprise were assured, until today Lydia E. Pinkham and her Vegetable Compound have become household words everywhere, and many tons of roots and herbs are used annually in its manufacture.

Lydia E. Pinkham herself did not live to see the great success of this work. She passed to her reward years ago, but not till she had provided means for continuing her work as effectively as she could have done it herself.

During her long and eventful experience she was ever methodical in her work and she was always careful to preserve a record of every case that came to her attention. The case of every sick woman who applied to her for advice—and there were thousands—received careful study, and the details, including symptoms, treatment and results were recorded for future reference, and to-day these records, together with hundreds of thousands made since, are available to sick women the world over, and represent a vast collaboration of information regarding the treatment of woman's ills, which for authenticity and accuracy can hardly be equaled in any library in the world.

With Lydia E. Pinkham worked her daughter-in-law, the present Mrs. Pinkham. She was carefully instructed in all her hard-won knowledge, and for years she assisted her in her vast correspondence.

To her hands naturally fell the direction of the work when its originator passed away. For nearly twenty-five years she has continued it, and nothing in the work shows when the first Lydia E. Pinkham dropped her pen, and the present Mrs. Pinkham, now the mother of a large family, took it up. With women assistants, some as capable as herself, the present Mrs. Pinkham continues this great work, and probably from the office of no other person have so many women been advised how to regain health. Sick women, this advice is "Yours for Health" freely given if you only write to ask for it.

Such is the history of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; made from simple roots and herbs; the one great medicine for women's ailments, and the fitting monument to the noble woman whose name it bears.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Kindness Rewarded.

St. Paul—Kindness has proved to be good business policy in the case of F. P. Ingalls, night clerk at the Ryan hotel, who expects to recove $20,000 in return for a loan of $25 made to a hardup friend more than ten years ago.

David Noble, a mining prospector who was a frequent patron of the hotel years ago, told Ingalls one night that he was "broke" and asked for a small loan. Ingalls promptly handed over $25 without any request for security, but Noble passed 1,000 shares of mining stock over to him, telling him that he might hold it as security.

Ingalls has not seen Noble since, but two weeks ago he received a letter from a Butte firm of brokers offering him $17 a share for his stock in the Noble Mining company of Cook City, Mont. He hunted up the old certificates and last night telegraphed that he would sell at $20.

Declines Good Offer.

Minneapolis—The United States department of agriculture has been trying to steal E. K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner, from the Minnesota service, but Mr. Slater stated today that he had declined the position offered, and would "stick to the ship."

The department under Secretary Wilson is about to install an inspection and grading bureau at New York for butter received there. The idea is to grade butter if desired by the trade, and to conduct an educational bureau, noting the faults in butter received, and notifying the shipper how to correct them. Mr. Slater was wanted as the head of this new service, and the position was tendered by E. W. Webster, chief of the dairy division. No salary was named, except to say that the salary would be made an inducement.

Mistaken for Wolf.

Crookston—While walking along the east branch of the Roseau river, near Pencer, Martin Larson had his left arm shot off and narrowly escaped death, being mistaken for a wolf. Edwin Severson, Larson's uncle, did the shooting.

Larson was walking along the bank of the river, hidden by the heavy growth of underbrush. Suddenly two shots rang out and Larson fell to the ground agonized by a painful wound in his wrist and forearm. Severson rushed to the spot and was horrified to see his nephew weltering in blood, instead of the wolf at which he supposed he had shot.

Fell to Death.

Minneapolis—While groping his way to his room in the darkness early Sunday morning, Patrick O'Laughlin, 171 Nicollet street, Nicollet island, made a false step and fell down the steep stairway, fracturing his skull and breaking his neck in the fall. He was dead when picked up.

O'Laughlin owned the house in which he lived. He occupied two rooms on the second floor, while the first floor was occupied by tenants. He returned between 1 and 2 o'clock Sunday morning, and it appears that he had just reached the top of the stairway when the accident occurred.

Girls Raise Money.

Mankato—The Southern Minnesota High School Field and Track association will hold its annual meet in this city the latter part of May. The athletic association of the local high school is anxious to present a good showing, and being without funds, the high school girls undertook to assist them. A supper was served, patronized by over two hundred people, the girls having entire charge of the kitchen, and ten of the club members acting as waiters. In the evening an athletic entertainment was given at the high school building by the club, with musical selections interspersed. The club cleared about $80 as a result of the supper and entertainment and has enough funds to carry it through the spring.

Big Banquet.

Duluth—Eight hundred attended the sixth annual banquet of the Garfield Republican club at the Masonic Temple hall. More than 200 guests came from the ranges and Two Harbors sent a large delegation. The hall was not large enough to accommodate everybody and an overflow banquet was held at a cafe.

The event was the most successful in the club's history. A feature of the evening was the strong patriotic sentiment that prevailed. It was vented when patriotic songs were sung, or some particularly striking remark was made that appealed to the assembled multitude.

News Notes.

St. Paul.—Experts tell the state commissioners how the railway companies figure freight rates.

St. Paul.—The property owners and merchants are arranging elaborate plans for the illumination of Sixth street.

Cass Lake.—The new village council was organized and started the municipal machinery for the ensuing year.

Minneapolis.—The attorney general holds that trolley lines are not under the jurisdiction of the state railway and warehouse commission.

Hastings.—At the Democratic city convention Mayor Charles Gall was renominated. H. M. Durr was nominated for clerk and A. F. Johnson for police justice.

St. Paul.—Bernard Johnson, 18 years old, living at 335 Hardenberg Place, was dragged a block by a runaway team.

St. Paul.—The annual report of the fire board, filed with Mayor Smith, shows that in 1905 there were 837 alarms. The fire loss for the year was $468,959, covered by insurance amounting in the aggregate to $1,968,029.

Stillwater.—Frank Palmstein is hovering between life and death at his home in this city from the effects of a wound in the temple, inflicted with a screw driver said to have been thrown by Lawrence Sundberg.

St. Paul.—E. K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner, has ordered the state chemist to investigate the use of preservatives in beer.

A CURE FOR DEBILITY

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills A Reliable Remedy for the Weak, Ailing and Bloodless.

When the body is weak and the blood thin it is sometimes difficult to find the cause unless a wasting illness has preceded, or the sufferer happens to be a girl on the verge of womanhood.

Obscure influences, something unhealthful in one's surroundings or work, may lead to a slow impoverishment of the blood and an enfeeblement of the whole body. When a serious stage has been reached there seems to be nothing that will account for it.

Mr. O. E. Legg, of Tipton, W. Va., has found a successful method of treating weakness and bloodlessness. He says:

"I used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for weakness caused by a lingering malarial fever that began in the spring of 1896. The worst effects of this were indigestion and a bad state of my blood. I was anæmic, as the doctors say. People generally would say that I didn't have blood enough, or that I didn't have the right kind of blood; mine was too thin. My kidneys and liver were out of order. I was badly annoyed by sour risings from my stomach. There was a good deal of pain, too, in my back and under my right shoulder blade."

"How long did these troubles last?"

"For over two years. For four months of that time I was under the care of a physician, but his medicine did me no good. Meanwhile I learned of the cures that had been wrought by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

"You owe your cure to these pills?"

"I certainly do, and I also know that they are helping others to whom I have recommended them. They have real merit and I know of nothing that would take their place."

GAVE HIM SPECIAL RATES.

Hotel Man Knew How to Please His Patrons and Benefit Himself.

It was one of those automatic hotels, where, if you want anything you go and look for it and don't find it, and where the landlord is a non est man until the next morning, when he says: "Two dollars, please." He never fails to be on hand then, relates a writer in Talent.

"Now, my "damagers" had sent me a little slip, giving me special rates of $1.50 single, and $1.25 double, and I thought it was a pretty good thing.

So in the morning I presented my little slip, saying:

"You gave us special rates, I believe, $1.5 a day?"

"Yah, dot iss right," answered mine host. "One dollar and a half is special."

So I paid him 15 cents, on which he made at least $1.30, and went my way, rejoicing as much as I could.

I strolled down to the depot with a commercial missionary, who seemed very much pleased about something, and presently in a very high state of chuckle, he said:

"Mr. Hawks, I laughed with you last night, but I had to laugh at you this morning."

"What's the joke?" I asked, for I didn't see any.

"That landlord gave you a special rate of $1.50 per, didn't he?"

"He did, indeed."

"Well, that's the joke; his regular rates are one dollar a day."

The man who spends his money as he makes it may argue that a bird in the hand is worth a whole aviary in the hands of his executors.

Great minds don't run in the same channels always. Their greatness is gauged by the agility with which they get out of a rut.—Judge.

"COFFEE JAGS."

The Doctor Named Them Correctly.

Some one said "Coffee never hurts anyone." Inquire of your friends and note their experiences.

A Phila. woman says:

"During the last 2 or 3 years I became subject to what the doctor called 'coffee jags' and felt like I have heard men say they feel who have drank too much rum. It nauseated me, and I felt as though there was nothing but coffee flowing through my veins.

"Coffee agreed well enough for a time, but for a number of years I have known that it was doing me great harm, but, like the rum toper, I thought I could not get along without it. It made me nervous, disordered my digestion, destroyed my sleep and brought on frequent and very distressing headaches.

"When I got what the doctor called a 'coffee jag' on, I would give up drinking it for a few days till my stomach regained a little strength, but I was always fretful and worried and nervous till I was able to resume the use of the drug.

"About a year ago I was persuaded to try Postum, but as I got it in restaurants it was nothing but a sloppy mess, sometimes cold, and always weak, and of course I didn't like it. Finally I prepared some myself, at home, following the directions carefully, and found it delicious. I persevered in its use, quitting the old coffee entirely, and feeling better and better each day, till I found at last, to my great joy, that my ailments had all disappeared and my longing for coffee had come to an end.

"I have heretofore suffered intensely from utter exhaustion, besides the other ailments and troubles, but this summer, using Postum, I have felt fine." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Restaurant cooks rarely prepare Postum Coffee properly. They do not let it boil long enough.

Upside Down.

"So you don't believe in College education?"

"No, sir. After graudation I nearly starved to death practicing law."

"But you look prosperous now."

"Yes, sir. I went into vaudeville and made a fortune balancing a barrel on my feet while standing on my head."—Detroit Free Press.

Somewhat Different.

"I say, old man," said Joshem, "did you ever see a cakewalk?"

"No," replied Soberleigh, "but I've seen a cheese that might have walked if the cage door had been left open."—Chicago Daily News.

TERRIBLE SCALP HUMOR.

Head Covered with Humor Sores, with Loss of Hair—Another Speedy Cure by Cuticura Remedies.

"All my life I had been troubled more or less with humor in my scalp, but about a year ago it became worse, and my scalp was covered with little sores, which itched so it nearly made me crazy; my hair also began to get dry and fall out. I tried all kinds of hair restorers with no effect, and I was nearly discouraged; but one day I was reading in a paper what the Cuticura Remedies had done for scalp diseases, and decided to make a trial. I got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Resolvent Pills. I used them according to directions, and soon noticed a difference; the tiny sores on my scalp began to heal, the itching stopped, and my hair began to grow thick. I have used only the one cake of Soap, one box of Ointment, and one vial of Pills, and now I have no humor on my scalp and my hair is soft and silky. Miss Mayzie C. Atkins, Box 32, East Orleans, Mass., Mar. 19, 1905."

One way to avoid giving alimony is to give your wife her share of the family income as you go along. An ounce of pin-money is worth a pound of alimony!—Albany Argus.

Following is a copy of the concluding paragraph of a long letter, dated March 17, 1906, reciting history of the matter, received by Dr. S. B. Hartman from Hon. J. W. Yerkes, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which explains itself:

"By reason of the changes made in the formula under which Peruna is now produced and placed upon the market, and by reason of the analyses made in this Bureau, and the opinion of the Surgeon-General of the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, above quoted, this office is of opinion that Peruna when prepared according to the formula now used contains sufficient drugs to render the preparation one beyond the ruling of this office of date September 12, 1905, and therefore persons compounding and selling same will not be required to secure a special tax stamp, either as rectifier, wholesale dealers or retail dealers of spirituous or vinous liquors."

A COLD BROUGHT IT ON.

Severe Congestion of the Kidneys Soon Cured by Doan's Kidney Pills.

Richard M. Pearce, a prominent business man of 231 So. Orange St., Newark, N. J., says: "Working nights during bad weather brought on a heavy cold, aching of the limbs and pain in the back and kidneys. Severe congestion of the kidneys followed. Besides the terrific aching there were whirling headaches, and I became exceedingly weak. My doctor could not help me, and I turned to Doan's Kidney Pills, with the result that the kidney congestion disappeared, and, with it, all the other symptoms. What is more, the cure has lasted for eight years."

SPRING ELECTION RESULTS.

Chicago goes on record in its city election as opposed to municipal operation of street railways, but in favor of issuing $75,000,000 of Mueller law certificates and speedy acquisition of the traction properties. The decent element controls the city council as the result of the election, with 42 aldermen on the side of high license.

David S. Rose, Democratic candidate for a fifth term as mayor of Milwaukee, was defeated by Sherman M. Becker, the young Republican candidate, who swept all before him, drawing largely from the vote the Social Democrats expected.

The Republican city ticket, headed by Henry M. Beardsley for mayor, was elected in Kansas City, Mo., Mr. Beardsley's majority over Robert L. Gregory (Dem.) being estimated at 1,200.

Municipal ownership triumphed in almost every town in Kansas.

Municipal and township elections were held in Michigan, local issues supplanting party politics, and the general tendency to break from boss rule being manifest.

MINERS' STRIKE NOTES.

Anthracite miners offered to refer the dispute to the present arbitration board with Judge Gray or his appointee as umpire, but the operators may veto the plan.

John H. Winder, president of the Bituminous Operators' association of Ohio, has proposed arbitration for the settlement of the strike in the bituminous districts, including Ohio, western Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois.

At a meeting in Pittsburg, Pa., of the independent soft coal operators who organized to fight the granting of the 1903 scale, a majority of the operators decided to sign.

Members of the Illinois Coal Operators' association declare they will keep up the fight with the miners all summer unless restrictions placed upon them are removed.

A shortage of almost 175,000,000 tons of coal is certain if the strike continues.

The coal companies supplying the Chicago public schools with soft fuel informed the board of education that they cannot deliver any more Illinois and Indiana coal while the strike lasts.

Coal production in eight states west of Pennsylvania is entirely suspended, according to officers of the Illinois Operators' association.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Tough Roads.

Duluth.—Reports from the different sections of Minnesota complaining of hardships encountered by rural delivery carriers on account of the unprecedented heavy traveling along the highways, are reaching the postoffice department. Several reports received from postmasters declared the impossibility of rendering full service until the roads, now absolutely impassable, dry out. In extreme cases, carriers will be required to cover as much of their routes as circumstances permit, and in cases where emergency requires will be permitted to temporarily make deliveries on horseback.

The department has agreed to cooperate with the Minnesota state highway commission in its efforts to improve the wagon roads of that state.

The alleged purpose of the Minnesota commission is to bring about improvements of roads in the state by assisting the local road authorities.

Duped the People.

St. Peter.—It has just developed that a dozen or more farmers living in the vicinity of the village of Courtland are losers to the extent of $25,000 or $30,000 through the discovery that mining stock in which they invested is absolutely valueless. They put their savings into a piece of property in Idaho, but it has been learned that the mine never existed, except in the literature of the promoter.

One young man threw up a paying position with a creamery and put all his savings, amounting to some $8,000, into the company, and another, a railway telegrapher, was good for $2,500.

The latter was the first to discover the swindle. One of the conditions under which he bought his stock was that he was to be given a position by the company and he was taken west by the promoter. After a few months his remittances for salary stopped coming and his chief disappeared.

Mad Dogs.

St. Paul.—Two men and two dogs are known to have been bitten by mad dogs which roamed through the Hill district. It is feared that a large number of other people, many of whom may have been children, fell victims to the brute's attacks.

The known human victims are Dr. J. D. O'Brien and A. L. Sibley, the latter of whom left on Saturday for Chicago, where he is now taking treatment in a Pateur institute. How many others there may be will not be known until all have reported to the authorities, and the people of the vicinities traversed by the rabid animals are warned to look carefully to their children's welfare. The dogs were suffering from the virulent form of the disease and would snap at and bite any person or thing that chanced in their way.

Butter Shipments.

Minneapolis.—Mild weather is promoting the shipment of butter and eggs to the East by the Minnesota dairymen and farmers. Until frost comes again the product will be shipped in car lots. During the cold weather the exportation of butter and eggs is light. Butter is already going out at the rate of from 150,000 to 175,000 pounds a week, and in a few days the quantity will be doubled.

Of the 80,000,000 pounds of butter made in Minnesota last year, it is estimated that 75 per cent was shipped out of the state. The refrigerator cars that transport the butter are iced at the end of every 200 miles. The butter is generally packed in 63-pound tubs, 20,000 to 35,000 pounds to the car.

Republican Convention.

Minneapolis.—Duluth gets the Republican state convention, and it will be held in the Zenith City June 13, calling to order at 10 a. m. There will be 1,090 delegates, based on the average vote ast for candidates on the state ticket in 1904.

The county conventions will be held June 6, one week earlier, and both dates fall on Wednesday. Saturday, June 2, is recommended as the date for the caucuses.

These questions were decided in a brief session of the Republican state committee at the Merchants' Hotel, St. Paul. The committee also took a new departure and incorporated in the call the statement that the convention will indorse a candidate for United States senator for the legislature to elect next winter.

News Notes.

Faribault.—C. M. Buck, state senator does not want to return to the senate and will not be a candidate for reelection.

St. Paul.—After making his own crude scaffold, George Adams, 77 years old, hanged himself in his shanty at 95 Cook street.

St. Cloud.—While playing about in the kitchen the eighteen months old son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Spath, living a few miles east of here, pulled a tub of boiling water upon him, scalding him so terribly that death ensued a few hours later.

Brainerd.—A man believed to have been the murderer of Patrick Helly, the wealthy bachelor who was killed recently near Motley, is said to have been in Brainerd shortly after the murder and boldly attempted to sell the team of horses belonging to his victim.

Grand Meadow.—The ballot resulted in a majority of forty-three against license, the largest majority ever given the no-license ticket.

St. Charles.—Farmers in this vicinity are organizing a co-operative elevator company for the purpose of erecting an elevator at this place. Stock is now being subscribed for and it is expected in this manner to raise about $10,000.

At Easter

By Kate A. Bradley

I wonder if the anguished moon looked down
Through all that long last night
And buried in her scarred breast, lean and brown,
The memory of that sight!
I wonder of th' uneasy birds awoke
As glowed that strange, great light
Which paled the purple east where morning broke,
And sang, inspired by God's own breath,
"There is no death! There is no death!"

There is no death, O hearts that throb in vain
With longing, pulsing tide,
Or in love's fullness, nigh akin to pain,
Unfearingly abide;
There is no death, O soul whom niggard fate
The cycles swing and joy those lips await
Who oft have sung on earth in pain,
"I rise again! I rise again!"

No sacrifice, O Self, can blot thee out,
Or satisfy the debt
Which binds thee to the usurer of doubt
With interest of regret!
Still is not life to even thee denied:
One way remaineth yet—
As was thy Christ, must thou be crucified,
But with those wounds in hands and feet,
E'en Self finds resurrection sweet!

Rejoice, O soul whose work is just begun,
That all time lies before!
Rejoice, O heart whose treasures all have won
That dimmer, farther shore!
The stone that angels moved away that night
Was rolled from Heaven's door;
Awake and stand forth in hope's sudden light,
And sing as sang the birds that morn:
"There is no death, for Life is born!"

DOTTY'S EASTER THOUGHT.

Whenever I see Easter eggs
I wonder how they grew.
Because I know they are too fine
For any hen to do;
I think the bird that laid them must
Have been a cockatoo.

I've watched and watched our biddy hens
From morning until night;
I know just what I'm talking 'bout,
And that I'm truly right
When I say all the eggs they lay
Are always just plain white.

The bird that lays the Easter ones
I'd dearly love to see;
It must seem like a box of paints
A-sitting on the tree,
If I could find it, I would say:
"Please lay an egg for me."

THE RABBIT AND EASTER.

How the Little Animal Came to Be Connected with the Celebration of the Day.

The part the hare plays in the celebration of Easter has nothing whatever to do with the resurrection of Christ. It is a survival of Teutonic folklore of unknown antiquity, and its religious connection is with nature-worship, and that phase of it in which the moon was a chief divinity. The hare became a symbol of the moon, for several reasons—because it comes out at night to feed; because the female carries her young for a month, representing the lunar cycle; because the young are born with their eyes open and were fabled never to close them, thus resembling the moon, "open-eyed watcher of the night;" in one way or another there grew up a fund of stories in which the connection of the hare, the lunar period and the paschal full moon, which fixes the date of Easter, developed so that it gave rise to many popular customs, in Germany, among the Scandinavian peoples and in England. The queerest bit of this folklore is that of the white hare, which the children are told comes into the house on Easter eve and leaves in corners eggs adorned in beautiful colors, which every good child may have. The egg was in religious legend from the oldest times a symbol of opening life and of immortality, and naturally of the resurrection, so here we have the people coupling the two. As for the rabbit, he is not the same as the European hare, but he is his nearest American congener, and other legends concerning the rabbit's foot and the full of the moon exist among the negroes of the south.

An Old Custom.

Easter has always been considered the chief festival of the Christian year. It is the sanctified symbolism of the wonderful resurrection of Christ; but it is also symbolic of the renewal of life in nature. Like many other customs, it is the perpetuation of an old usage, which became the rule in the Christian church in A. D. 68.

HISTORY OF EASTER.

Day Commemorates Resurrection of Christ—A Movable Festival Among Christians.

It is well known that in the early Christian church for a long series of years warm disputes took place as to the proper date on which to observe Easter. The churches of Asia Minor, following what is called "The tradition of St. John," kept the fourteenth day of the Jewish month Nisan. The western churches, however, supported by the church at Jerusalem and a few others, said it was necessary that a Friday should always be set apart to commemorate Christ's death, and a Sunday His resurrection. The contest grew so warm that each side excommunicated the other. Surely trivialities could hardly go much further! It is difficult for us to imagine that our fathers could have disputed, and separated the one from the other, over a matter of this kind; but it is true that the apple of discord which seemed to the people of that age to be made of gold, to their successors appears to be made only of iron or clay. With us, as is well known, Easter is what is called a movable festival. It is always held on the next Sabbath after the vernal full moon, with the exception that of the vernal full moon should fall on a Sunday, then, to avoid all conformity with the Jewish practice, Easter is not kept till the following Sabbath. The vernal full moon is that which either takes place on March 21 or on the next date after March 21. If the vernal full moon falls on March 21, and that day happens to be a Sunday, then Easter cannot be held till April 25, which is the latest date on which Easter can fall, the earliest being March 22. This is certainly a very mechanical contrivance, and one which most people find it difficult to understand or remember. Owing to obvious connection between Easter and the Jewish Passover, the French call the former Paques (from the Hebrew Pesech, which means a passing over), and obviously some such title as this would be more appropriate than ours, which comes from the Saxon goddess Eostre, believed to the same as the Syrian Astarte and the Greek and Roman Venus, who was specially worshiped in the spring season as the mother and giver of animal and vegetable life. From the earliest ages various customs and superstitions have associated themselves with Easter. As at Christmas it used to be believed that all water was turned into wine and that all cattle knelt in their stalls in adoration of the infant Saviour, so it was held that at Easter the sun danced in honor of Christ's resurrection.—Chicago Standard.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1,50

There is always a class of people in every locality that never contribute anything to any enterprise, except their opinion and that is generly not worth much.

Well we believe that we are going to attend that republican convention at Duluth, as the northern part of the state had ought to have as big a turn out as possible if for no other reason than to let the southern part of the state know that there are a few people liveing up this way.

Judging from the large number of Thief River Falls, citizens who are sojourning at Stillwater since the last term of court, it would seem to us that it would be better for them to adjourn the County seat fight until after some of their voters had served their time and get restored to citizenship.

Who will be the nominee of the republican party for governor at Duluth June13th? Wait until after the convention and you will find out. Who will be the next governor of Minnesota? Why the man that gets the nomination of the Republican party at Duluth June 13th, thats easy.

The bridge across the Clearwater river at the Kollinson place in the town of Equality is now completed and in a passible condition. This bridge is a credit to the enterprise and energy of some of the enterprising farmers of that township, who after being turned down by the County Commissioners took hold of the matter and built the bridge with their good muscles and private subscription. The bridge is built in a good and substancial manner and will be a great convienance to the people that cross the river at this point.

The Plummer Pioneer could not refrain from taking a fall out of the Clearwater river farmers, that are building a creamery down there, by publishing an interview with one Joel Winkjer, who might be more properly called "Joe Wind jerker", calling the premoters of the enterprise fakiers and grafters. The interview originated in the Crookston Times and was undoubtedly written by one of the society editors on that paper who could not tell a cow from a sheep, if he met them in the road, but as it was a slap at some of the people that are trying to build creameries up in this direction Mr. Latta did not loose the opportunity to publish it.

The Sauk Center Herald pays this tribute to Minnesota's senior senator:" As a sample of Knute Nelson's interest in the poorest citizen, a residen of this locality made a final proof on a homestead in Red Lake county. The proof was rejected on a mere technicality We placed all the facts in the hands of Senator Nelson. This morning we recieved a notice from the land office at Washington that the Crookston officials were peremptorially ordered to allow the final proof. Nothing is to large or to small for " Uncle Knute' to look after when the interests of those he represents are at stake, and we are of the opinion that he takes more pleasure in helping out a poor man than he does a millionaire."

Trouble For Government Clerks.

"Congress makes lots of unnecessary trouble for the government clerks," said a veteran employee, "but the worst case I know of occurred some years ago. A certain senator asked the comptroller of the currency to tell him how much stock a certain man had in a national bank. He was informed that such information was regarded as confidential and could not be given out."

"We'll see about that," said the senator, who was plainly disappointed and displeased.

"Several days later he secured the passage of a resolution calling upon the secretary of the treasury to furnish the senate with the names and holdings of the stockholders in all the national banks in the country. He really wanted to know only the interest of one man in a bank, but he knew that he couldn't get a resolution of that kind through the senate, so he included the stockholders in all national banks. It took the entire force of the comptroller's office several weeks to prepare the information, and when it reached the senate nobody paid any attention to it except the author of the resolution, and he merely looked at the mass of papers only long enough to see about the man he was after and then tossed the papers aside. It was an immense lot of work for nothing."—Washington Star.

The Abbe's Criticism.

An American lady residing in Rome presented to a friend, who is an abbe, an intellectual man and familiar with English, although no traveler, a copy of one of Mary Wilkins' New England stories.

"The author of this, my dear friend," she said, "is the best portrayer of New England character we have. No other writer has caught so well the charm of the place and the people. I hope you will like it."

The abbe took the book and thanked her. In a few days he came again and returned it gingerly, saying a word or two of thanks.

"Were you not pleased with the quaint portrayal of the life?" asked the lady.

"You say this is a faithful portrayal of life in New England?"

"Very faithful indeed."

The abbe sighed and said, with deep sympathy, "How sad!"—Reader Magazine.

The Curse of Shiftlessness.

Whether shiftlessness is a vice that is incurable or a habit that can be overcome, it is anyhow a condition that perplexes and irritates relieving officials. Shiftlessness is paying one's last 50 cents for a circus ticket without learning where tomorrow's breakfast is coming from. It is a refusal to repair the leak in the roof when the sun shines. It is killing the goose that lays the golden eggs. It takes no thought of the morrow. It never lays up anything for a rainy day. It always ignores opportunities. It prefers to rely on neighborhood bounty to hustling for itself. It won't work, except under the pressure of necessity. It never gets ahead. —Hartford Times.

Man Who Beheaded Charles I.

The mysterious masked man who beheaded Charles I. remains British analogue for the Man With the Iron Mask. Lilly, the lying astrologer, denounced Cornet Joyce at the restoration, but Joyce on the fatal 30th of January was not in favor with Cromwell. The parish register of Whitechapel records the burial in 1649 of Richard Brandon, the common hangman, and opposite the entry a contemporary hand wrote that "he cut off the head of Charles the First." Brandon himself asserted that "they made him do it for £30," with which he drank himself to death.—Dundee Advertiser.

Drinking Hot Water.

Persons who have irritability of the heart should not drink hot water. Hot water will cause palpitation in such cases. Persons with dilated stomachs should avoid the drinking of hot water; persons afflicted with "sour stomachs;" persons who have soreness of the stomach or pain induced by light pressure should also refrain from drinking it. Hot water will relieve thirst better than cold water, and for that purpose it should not be condemned, but hot water is an excitant, and in cases in which irritation of the stomach exists it should be avoided.

Drudgery.

The everyday cares and duties which men call drudgery are the weights and counterpoises of the clock of time, giving its pendulum a true vibration and its hands a regular motion, and when they cease to hang upon its wheels the pendulum no longer swings, the hands no longer move, the clock stands still. —Longfellow.

A Protest.

The Lion—The leopard, you know, cannot change his spots. The Zebra—Well, I can't change my stripes either, but no one ever thought it of sufficient interest to make a proverb of.—Philadelphia Record.

Good Nature May Be Costly.

"Don't look so glum, Pilkerton. Use cheery words. They cost nothing."

"Cost nothing! If I speak ten cheery words to my wife, she asks me for some money."

A Little Misunderstanding.

"Sir, your son's performance on the French horn is execrable. It will drive everybody from my house. You told me he was a teacher."

"I did not. I said he was a tooter."

Men are often capable of greater things than they perform. They are sent into the world with bills of credit and seldom draw to their full extent.—Walpole.

Franklin's Sawdust Pudding.

Franklin believed in fair competition, in freedom for others as well as himself and cared more for his personal independence in the conduct of his business than for the business itself. The story of the sawdust pudding should be known in every newspaper office in the country. When he first started the Gazette he made some free comments on certain public officials, and some of the influential patrons of the paper resented it and tried to stop it. He invited them to dinner. When they came they found nothing on the table but a pudding made of coarse meal and a jug of water. They sat down. Franklin filled their plates and then his own and proceeded to eat heartily, but his guests could not swallow the stuff. After a few moments Franklin rose and, looking at them, said quietly: "My friends, any man who can subsist on sawdust pudding, as I can, needs no man's patronage."—American Illustrated Magazine.

A Scheme and a Luncheon.

One of Balzac's wild schemes was a plan to combine Paris theaters. One morning in September, 1839—an early day to talk of monopoly—ten literary friends of the great novelist met by invitation at his house. Before luncheon Balzac told them of his scheme. His idea was to form a trust to buy up all the theaters as a sequel to a smaller preliminary trust for the supply of plays to every theater in Paris. The ten guests were to supply them. He estimated the profits of the first year at £120,000, and each year would, he thought, bring in more money. He expounded his scheme at length for over an hour, and finally one of the guests suggested that he might go on at table. The novelist started. "I forgot all about ordering anything to eat!" he cried, and late in the afternoon the members of the shadowy trust made a shadowy meal of bread and cheese and sour wine in a small country restaurant.

Forests and National Prosperity.

As a living example of the consequences of deforestation we need simply look to Spain, a country which centuries ago was rich in timber and agricultural products, a proud seafaring nation of world conquerors. Brides Priced.

To us it seems a curious whim on the part of our ancestors of the eighteenth century that in their marriage announcements they should so often choose and with such seeming complacency to enlighten the world with regard to the amount of fortune received with the brides. Here are two cases in point: "Mr. James Coutts of Jeffry's Sq., merchant, to Miss Peagrum of Knightsbridge. £30,000." "W. Smith, gentleman, of the 2d Troop of Horse Guards, to Mrs. Ann Gardiner, a maiden lady, aged, 'tis said, near 70, with a fortune of £20,000."—Chambers' Journal.

The Fall of the Hennins.

The hennins or headdresses worn by ladies of the fifteenth century were in shape of horns and so long that a woman's face appeared to be in the center of her figure. The clergy condemned them and threatened the wearers with perdition, but for all that they were worn higher than ever. At last a strolling evangelist at Paris promised absolution to all who would destroy the hennins, and the mob went to work and wrecked the headdresses whenever they appeared in public. The hennins were trampled under foot and their wearers insulted all over Paris. Scores of lives were lost in the efforts of the cavaliers to defend the hennins from the rabble, but in vain, and the enormous headdresses disappeared, some other feminine absurdity taking their place.

Whose Key Unlocked the Drawer?

Here is a true story told by a doctor. This doctor had a patient, a brother physician, who was ill of a disease no one has ever cured yet. The sick man realized that his case was hopeless, and he knew, too, that before he died he would go through horrible convulsions. He begged his friend to kill him in order to spare his wife the sight of anything so unforgettably hideous, and the physician, bound by his code of ethics, refused. The sick man begged his wife to let him have his revolver, but she refused. The physician locked the drawer of the bureau in which it lay and gave the wife the key. Two days later the sick man shot himself, and the revolver he used was his own. He had unlocked the drawer.

"We found the key in it," said the doctor. "It was not the one I had given to the wife. I took it, and when I had a chance I went quietly into the room occupied by the man's mother. The key exactly fitted the lock of her bureau. That's all I know, except that the mother came out of the house with her bonnet and cloak on two minutes before her son shot himself."—Washington Post.

"Why?" asked the applicant.

"Because you can't tell what direction sounds come from; hence in a place like this you would be in great danger."

"How do you know I can't tell what direction sounds come from?" the applicant demanded.

"No person deaf in one ear," replied the boilermaker, "can do so. A man deaf in one ear will look behind him if a gun goes off on his right. He will look up in the air if a child shrieks at his feet. He will look wildly in front of him if a locomotive whistles in his rear. A boiler shop is no place for such a man."

"I knew I was like this," said the applicant, "but I didn't know all half deaf people were."

"They all are," said the boilermaker, "and my shop is no place for them."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

All a Matter of Doubt Anyway.

A young man from the south who a few years ago was so fortunate as to be enabled to enter the law offices of a well known New York firm was first intrusted with a very simple case. He was asked by the late James C. Carter, then a member of the firm, to give an opinion in writing. When this was submitted it was observed by Mr. Carter that, with the touching confidence of a neophyte, the young southerner had begun with the expression, "I am clearly of opinion."

When this caught his eye he smiled and said:

"My dear young friend, never state that you are clearly of opinion on a law point. The most you can hope to discover is the preponderance of the doubt."—Success.

Out of the Public.

When I was a very little boy, writes Sir William Gregory in his autobiography, my grandfather, who was then undersecretary for Ireland, took me to the chief secretary's room in Dublin castle and formally introduced me to Lord Melbourne.

After I had been with him for some little time he said, "Now, my boy, is there anything here you would like?"

"Yes," I answered, pointing to a very large stick of sealing wax.

"That's right," said Lord Melbourne, pressing on me a bundle of pens; "begin life early. All these things belong to the public, and your business must always be to get out of the public as much as you can."—Pearson's Weekly.

Omens of Bricklayers.

Bricklayers believe it is unlucky to lay the top brick at the north corner of a building. Some of them would lose a day's pay rather than imperil their future by doing such a piece of work. A bricklayer often bricks up in the hollow of a wall a horseshoe with a cent tied to it. This he does for good luck. To lay the first and last brick of any building but a church brings good luck to the bricklayer. Churches are the luckiest buildings to work on; theaters are the unluckiest. It is bad luck to break a trowel.—New York Press.

Corroborative.

"This," exclaimed the orator, "is a decadent nation! As before the fall of Rome everything was rotten, so today in our erstwhile fair land everything"—

Just here an egg struck him fairly.

His nostrils dilated.

"I desire," he continued, "before retiring to add that this egg is corroborative evidence."—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Case For Sympathy.

"I have three children, who are the very image of myself," said Jones enthusiastically.

"I pity the youngest," returned Brown quietly.

"Why?" asked Jones.

"Because he is the one who will have to resemble you the longest," said Brown.—Tit-Bits.

Desperate.

Blessing the River.

In the little Balkan state of Roumania it has been the custom from time immemorial for towns by the river Danube to keep the Christmas feast by a peculiar ceremony called "blessing the river." This used to be carried out on a scaffolding erected on the frozen river, but owing to an accident, when the ice broke, and hundreds of people were drowned, it is now held upon the bank. The people wear turbans of colored paper and carry long, white wands. Some are dressed to represent Biblical characters. The service, conducted by priests, lasts about half an hour, and then the ice is broken and a small wooden cross thrown into the water. Then people rush into the icy river after this emblem, and the person who secures it is supposed to be assured of great good luck for the coming year.

He Wore the Robe.

A story is told of the late Dr. Peddie, a Scotch minister, to whom his congregation had presented a pulpit robe. He had never worn a robe, and, after acknowledging the gift, he said he would wait in the vestry five minutes after service to hear any objectors to the innovation. Nobody appeared but one old lady, who, on being asked what her objections were, answered that she had read the epistles of St. Paul and could not find any reference to the apostle wearing a gown. "What epistle did you read?" asked the doctor. "From Romans to Hebrews," answered the old lady. "Well, Janet," said her minister, "I have read from Romans to Hebrew also, and I could never find any reference to the apostle wearing the breeks. What would you think if you saw me going into the pulpit without breeks?" Needless to say, the old lady departed satisfied with the explanation.

Evolution of the Needle.

Sewing needles of bone, stone, glass and bronze antedate all historic records, but those of iron, brass and steel are comparatively modern. Bone and glass needles have been found in Egyptian tombs that are known to be over 4,000 years old, and similar domestic instruments of bronze and copper have been found in the mounds and burial caves of Europe and America which are believed to be much older than those found with the Nile mummies. The needle first appeared in its present form in European countries in the year 1410, but the art of making them was kept a secret for upward of 150 years after the date last given. In the year 1680 they were first made in the American colonies, but at what point is a mooted question among the historians.

Walt Whitman.

Of the days when Walt Whitman was a nurse in the hospitals of the civil war a biographer of the poet says: "He would often come into the wards carrying wild flowers newly picked and strewing them over the beds like a herald of the summer. Well did he know that they were messengers of life to the sick, words to them from the earth-mother of men. And then as he left of a night after going his last round and kissing many a young, pale, bearded face in fulfillment of his own written injunctions he would hear the boys calling: 'Walt, Walt, Walt! Come again, come again!'"

Hindoo Idols.

Several weeks ago I was in an Indian village and peeped inside the chief Hindoo temple. To my great surprise I saw the portrait of a famous London beauty, nicely framed, calmly looking down at the idol beneath it. The lady, I am sure, never dreamed that she would be worshiped in this way.—Lucknow Letter to London Mail.

Voluble.

"Have you seen Professor Gabbleton, the scientist, lately?"

"Yes; I listened to him for more than an hour at the club last night."

"Indeed! What was he talking about?"

"He didn't say."—Puck.

A Poor Trade.

"Yes," said the African chieftain pleasantly, "I gave eight mules for my wife, and I must say that I got badly bunkoed."

"So?"

"That's what. It was found a case of swapping eight for one."—Louisville Courier Journal.

The Verdict.

Records of the ancient city of Gorgeana, founded in 1642, better known at the present time as York Harbor, Me., contain many quaint and unusual stories of the early life of the town.

At the entrance to York harbor a bold promontory known as Stage neck extends some distance into the sea, from which formerly in stormy weather a temporary light in the form of a lantern hoisted upon an upright pole was displayed as a warning to mariners.

One dark winter night a sloop was wrecked on these rocks. A survivor on being questioned about the catastrophe said:

"The vessel struck, turned over on her side, and the skipper and another barrel of whisky rolled overboard."

The local coroner was summoned, and this somewhat startling verdict was returned:

"We find that the deceased fell from the masthead and was killed. He rolled overboard and was drowned. He floated ashore and froze to death, and the rats eat him up alive!"—Harper's Weekly.

SCRAPS OF SCIENCE.

The fiftieth anniversary of the invention of the aniline dye is to be celebrated by the world of science by the placing of a portrait of the inventor, Dr. Perkin, in the National Portrait gallery, and a bust in the rooms of the Chemical society at Burlington House, London.

Gas is the fundamental basis of the sense of smell, says Dr. John Aitken, F. R. S., according to the Scientific American. Berthelot says that one hundredth of a quadrillionth of a gram of musk can be detected by the nose. Dr. Aitken has found that of 24 odorous substances investigated not one gave off its perfume in solid particles; nothing but gases and vapors escaped from any of them.

Two distinct organizations, both composed of men eminent in science, are studying the sun with extraordinary care. One, the Solar Commission, established in 1903, is devoting its researches to the effect of the sun on the weather and climatic changes of the earth. The other, the Solar Union, formed in 1904, is endeavoring to ascertain more than is now known about the sun itself. Both are European associations.

Doctor Brigham Says

MANY PHYSICIANS PRESCRIBE

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The wonderful power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound over the diseases of womankind is not because it is a stimulant, not because it is a palliative, but simply because it is the most wonderful tonic and reconstructor ever discovered to act directly upon the generative organs, positively curing disease and restoring health and vigor.

Marvelous cures are reported from all parts of the country by women who have been cured, trained nurses who have witnessed cures and physicians who have recognized the virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and are fair enough to give credit where it is due.

If physicians dared to be frank and open, hundreds of them would acknowledge that they constantly prescribe Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in severe cases of female ills, as they know by experience it can be relied upon to effect a cure. The following letter proves it.

Dr. S. C. Brigham, of 4 Brigham Park, Fitchburg, Mass., writes:

"It gives me great pleasure to say that I have found Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound very efficacious, and often prescribe it in my practice for female difficulties.

"My oldest daughter found it very beneficial for a female trouble some time ago, and my youngest daughter is now taking it for a female weakness, and is surely gaining in health and strength.

"I freely advocate it as a most reliable specific in all diseases to which women are subject, and give it honest endorsement."

Women who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, bloating (or flatulency), weakness of organs, displacements, inflammation or ulceration, can be restored to perfect health and strength by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. If advice is needed write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. She is daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and for twenty-five years has been advising sick women free of charge. No other living person has had the benefit of a wider experience in treating female ills. She has guided thousands to health. Every suffering woman should ask for and follow her advice if she wants to be strong and well.

THE EASTER BONNET TRAGEDY

Her pretty easter bonnet
Had a full-fledged garden on it,
And fifty yards of ribbon—by the mass!
And of birds I counted plenty;
(I am sure they numbered twenty!)
Half the songsters of the settlement—alas!
And lo! there came a wonder;
When the organ pealed in thunder,
And demurely in her cushioned pew she sat—
While the minster-bells were ringing,
All the birds—they went to singing
In a wild, tumultuous chorus on her hat!

And the bees—from meadows golden
Came buzzing down the velvet aisles and dim;
They left their native bowers
And sought honey in the flowers—
The roses on that Easter bonnet's rim!

Then the saints—they grew excited,
And they fled the scene affrighted,
And fans and other weapons did they seize,
And that lovely Easter bonnet—
With the full-fledged garden on it—
Was surrendered to the mad, marauding bees!
—F. L. Stanton, in Atlanta Constitution.

A LENTEN SACRIFICE

By GEORGE BROOKS

"WILL I knock 'em cold, will I? Ask me." Mr. Jhonnie Farley, the night engineer of the state asylum, took another long, lingering look in the mirror and bestowed another loving pat on his new necktie.

His roommate, Timmy Lawrence, walked around critically and took another look at Mr. J. Farley's necktie. "You got 'em skinned to death, John," said Mr. Lawrence, with the air of one having authority.

"You're right," went on Mr. J. Farley. "You see, Timmy, I couldn't afford to blow in a lot of dough on a new Easter suit like all the rest of these dudes around here have done. But, Timmy, I know a lot about dressing, an' I know that you can have a pretty bum suit, but if you've got a peachy necktie people will jest keep their eyes on that an' won't notice the clothes. So I pikes around town the other afternoon, and I picks out the smoothest thing in the necktie line that there was. When people get a flash of this necktie of mine, say, they won't think of anything else. It'll kill 'em dead. Say, ain't it a wonder?"

Mr. Lawrence allowed that it was, and Mr. Farley, after another look at the necktie which was so gorgeous that it would have made Joseph's coat of many colors look like a dish rag, was about to take a turn around the asylum grounds before breakfast when Luke Lavin, the electrician, entered.

"Say, Jack," said Luke, "I'm up against it."

"Why?" queried Mr. Lawrence, turning so that the full broadside of his wonderful necktie was flashed all at once upon the astonished gaze of the electrician.

"Out of sight," said Mr. Lavin. "Looks like a peacock's tail."

"What's the trouble?" asked the proud owner of the Easter necktie.

"I'll tell you," went on the electrician. "You ought to be interested, too. You've been making eyes at that little white faced Thomas girl that's been here a couple of weeks helping in the office. You know the women attendants here in the asylum always color a half dozen eggs or so apiece every Easter morning for our breakfast, and we fellers got up a prize this time to go to the one who colored the prettiest eggs. Well, all the women around here have got it in for that Thomas girl, cause she's new, I reckon, and because we fellers all sort of like her better'n the rest. I wanted her to win the prize so's she could have something to feel proud over and cheer her up, understand. But I had a flash at the eggs they've been a coloring, and, say, they're out of sight, and I've been trying to find some stuff of coloring that would be prettier than everything else, but I can't, and I'm up against it. It wanted to take the cloth over and give it to the Thomas girl so she could take the prize. But it's pretty near breakfast time now, and I'll have to quit."

The electrician and Timmy went out together and left Mr. J. Farley alone, still contemplating his necktie in the mirror. For a long time he stood as if in great mental anguish, and then he sat down in a chair and for a time was exceedingly busy.

The breakfast table in the attendants' room at the asylum that morning presented a gala appearance, with Easter eggs of every shade and hue. The prize was about to be awarded when shy little Miss Thomas brought in a plate of Easter eggs that fairly reveled in beautiful colors, and called forth salvos of applause. The judges without leaving their seats awarded the prize to Miss Thomas, who smiled with joy and pride.

"Them eggs are purtier than your new necktie," said the electrician to Mr. J. Farley. "Say, where is that necktie? You got your old black one on, and you were blowing so about your new one. Them eggs look like—ouch, say, what are you kicking me for?"

Miss Thomas looked a moment in wondering surprise. Then her eyes filled with tears, and she let her hand just for a moment rest on Mr. J. Farley's coat sleeve.—Chicago Tribune.

A Favorite Wedding Day.

Easter Monday is the Hungarian's favorite wedding day, as it is supposed that it is especially fortunate for marriages, and the priests are usually kept busy that day. The rest of the week is filled with social gayeties, and the quiet of the rigorously observed Lent is fully atoned for.

A LIVING DEATH.

Vividly Described by a Citizen of Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

Andrew Johnson, 411 West Twelfth St., Sioux Falls, S. D., says: "Doan's Kidney Pills saved my life. My doctor, from a careful analysis of the urine and a diagnosis of my case, had told me I could not live six weeks. I was struck down in the street with kidney trouble, and for a whole year could not leave the house. I lost flesh, my eyes failed me, I bloated at times, my back hurt and I suffered a living death. There seemed no hope until I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. Then I began to improve. The pain left gradually, the swellings subsided, I gained appetite and weight, and, to make a long story short, I got well!"

AN UNLUCKY THIRTEEN.

They Were All Creditors and Not One Ever Got a Cent Due Them.

"Did you ever sit down at a table where there were just 13?" asked a man of his companion in a railway carriage.

"Once," replied the latter.

"Well, you never observed that any bad luck followed it, did you?"

"Why, yes. Bad luck for most of the 13."

"Any of them die?"

"Not that I know of. Never heard of any of them dying."

"Not enough victuals to go round?" queried the other.

"Who's talking about victuals? There wasn't any victuals."

"Thought you said you sat down to a table where there were 13 persons.

"That's what I said. The table was in a lawyer's office. It was a meeting of my creditors. There were 12 of them. I was the other man."

There was a long pause, and then the first speaker inquired:

"In what way did the meeting prove unlucky, may I ask?"

"None of them ever got a cent from me," answered the other, heaving a deep sigh as he left the carriage.

SAVED BABY LYON'S LIFE.

Awful Sight from That Dreadful Complaint, Infantile Eczema—Mother Praises Cuticura Remedies.

"Our baby had that dreadful complaint, Infantile Eczema, which afflicted him for several months, commencing at the top of his head, and at last covering his whole body. His sufferings were untold and constant misery, in fact, there was nothing we would not have done to have given him relief. We finally procured a full set of the Cuticura Remedies, and in about three or four days he began to show a brighter spirit and really laughed, for the first time in a year. In about ninety days he was fully recovered. Praise for the Cuticura Remedies has always been our greatest pleasure, and there is nothing too good that we could say in their favor, for they certainly saved our baby's life, for he was the most awful sight that I ever beheld, prior to the treatment of the Cuticura Remedies. HIGH CLASS DRUGGISTS

AND—OTHERS.

The better class of druggists, everywhere, are men of scientific attainments and high integrity, who devote their lives to the welfare of their fellow men in supplying the best of remedies and purest medicinal agents of known value, in accordance with physicians' prescriptions and scientific formula. Druggists of the better class manufacture many excellent remedies, but always under original or officinal names and they never sell false brands, or imitation medicines. They are the men to deal with when in need of anything in their line, which usually includes all standard remedies and corresponding adjuncts of a first-class pharmacy and the finest and best of toilet articles and preparations and many useful accessories and remedial appliances. The earning of a fair living, with the satisfaction which arises from a knowledge of the benefits conferred upon their patrons and assistance to the medical profession, is usually their greatest reward for long years of study and many hours of daily toil. They all know that Syrup of Figs is an excellent laxative remedy and that it gives universal satisfaction, and therefore they are selling many millions of bottles annually to the well informed purchasers of the choicest remedies, and they always take pleasure in handing out the genuine article bearing the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package. They know that in cases of colds and headaches attended by biliousness and constipation and of weakness or torpidity of the liver and bowels, arising from irregular habits, indigestion, or over-eating, that there is no other remedy so pleasant, prompt and beneficial in its effects as Syrup of Figs, and they are glad to sell it because it gives universal satisfaction.

Owing to the excellence of Syrup of Figs, the universal satisfaction which it gives and the immense demand for it, imitations have been made, tried and condemned, but there are individual druggists to be found, here and there, who do not maintain the dignity and principles of the profession and whose greed gets the better of their judgment, and who do not hesitate to recommend and try to sell the imitations in order to make a larger profit. Such preparations sometimes have the name—"Syrup of Figs"—or "Fig Syrup" and of some piratical concern, or fictitious fig syrup company, printed on the package, but they never have the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of the package. The imitations should be rejected because they are injurious to the system. In order to sell the imitations they find it necessary to resort to misrepresentation or deception, and whenever a dealer passes off on a customer a preparation under the name of "Syrup of Figs" or "Fig Syrup," which does not bear the full name of the California Fig Syrup Co. printed on the front of the package, he is attempting to deceive and mislead the patron who has been so unfortunate as to enter his establishment, whether it be large or small, for if the dealer resorts to misrepresentation and and deception in one case he will do so with other medicinal agents, and in the filling of physicians' prescriptions, and should be avoided by every one who values health and happiness. Knowing that the great majority of druggists are reliable, we supply the immense demand for our excellent remedy entirely through the druggists, of whom it may be purchased everywhere, in original packages only, at the regular price of fifty cents per bottle, but as exceptions exist it is necessary to inform the public of the facts, in order that all may decline or return any imitation which may be sold to them. If it does not bear the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package, do not hesitate to return the article and to demand the return of your money, and in future go to one of the better class of druggists who will sell you what you wish and the best of everything in his line at reasonable prices.

THE VESUVIUS DISASTER.

Mount Vesuvius has ceased to give any sign of life. The volcano seems to have spent itself in one enormous convulsion. Director Matteucci, who holds his post in the observatory, believes that the erption has ended, and every outward indication confirms this view.

Deaths in the eruption of Mount Vesuvius are estimated at 500. Hundreds more are injured and the homeless number 250,000. The panic-stricken natives continue to flee by tens of thousands from the region of the volcano. The king and queen of Italy face danger.

Ashes from Mount Vesuvius crushed a crowded market place in Naples, killing 14 and injuring more than 200 persons.

Naples is panic-stricken over Vesuvius' eruption; factories, shops and cafes are closed, and the city is in darkness; famine riots are feared; the king has taken command of the situation; volcano shows diminished energy, but ashes are still falling.

Mount Vesuvius continues to throw out great masses of ashes and cinders. The suffering in the region increases and the death list grown as rescuers dig in the ruined towns.

CONGRESSIONAL NEWS.

The Indian appropriation bill was reported from the senate committee by Chairman Clapp. The committee added items aggregating $2,471,473, of which $817,074 is reimbursable and eliminated items carrying $23,000.

Senator Hale, chairman of the naval committee of the senate, announced that, in his opinion, the senate would concur in the action the house is expected to take authorizing the construction of one battleship of sufficient size and strength to defend worthily the flag of the United States.

The house committee on industrial arts and expositions has voted to report the bill for government participation in the Jamestown centennial exposition to be held on the shores of Hampton roads, in Norfolk county, Virginia, next summer. The amount carried in the bill is $1,400,000.

President Roosevelt declined to accept the Knox amendment to the rate bill. If the senate adopts it he will urge the house to repudiate it.

The house committee on post offices and post roads reported the post office appropriation bill to the house. It provides for an expenditure of $191,373,848 for the fiscal year 1907. This amount exceeds the appropriation for 1906 by $10,351,755.

Republican members of the senate have reached a compromise on the rate bill, said to be satisfactory to the president, which will broaden the court review feature a little more in favor of the railroads.

Senator Foraker in a speech in the senate assailed the rate bill as a fraud.

The house committee has acted favorably on the resolution calling for election of senators by direct vote and lengthening the term of representatives to four years.

MISCELLANEOUS.

President Roosevelt's repeated declaration that he will not run for the presidency again have little effect on those who insist that he must be a candidate in 1908, and the many aspirants are puzzled over the situation.

Without any warning 700 mail carriers struck at Vienna. They had been receiving about $20 a month, and demanded an addition of from two to four dollars. The strike was settled by a partial concession to the drivers.

It is reported that a proposition to establish a bank with a capital of $50,000,000 for the purpose of regulating money and exchange rates during times of financial stringency, such as that recently experienced in Wall street, is under consideration by interests connected with the stock exchange and by the National City bank of New York.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

SECRETARY TAFT PREFERS THE WOOL SACK.

AND NOT THE PRESIDENCY

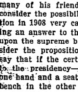
How the Fever of Gambling Has Taken Hold of Society Woman—Foreign Residents Eager for American Game.

WASHINGTON. — It is pretty well understood that Secretary of War Taft will accept the place upon the supreme bench to be made vacant by the retirement of Justice Brewer, although he has made no public announcement of his intention. It would be almost impossible for him to decline this great honor.

Secretary Taft's father was a noted lawyer, and he was attorney general as well as secretary of war, the position now held by his son. Like his son, he always cherished an ambition to become a member of the supreme court, but the opportunity never came. The oldest brother of the secretary, Henry W. Taft, is an eminent jurist in New York. Mrs. Taft is the daughter of Judge Herron, of Cincinnati, one of the prominent jurists of Ohio, who has sat on all the courts of that state. The whole environment of Secretary Taft has been that of the law. He was born to it, married into it, and his children have elected to go into it after him.

For awhile it looked as though Secretary Taft might yield to the allurements of a presidential boom, and many of his friends advised him to consider the possibility of his nomination in 1908 very carefully before giving an answer to the offer of the seat upon the supreme bench. He did consider the proposition long enough to say that if the certainty of election—to the presidency—were held out in one hand and a seat upon the supreme bench in the other he would choose the woolsack.

The Fashionable Vice.

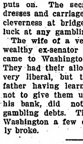


THERE is a fever of gambling among the society women of Washington, those in official, diplomatic and private life. Ministers of the Gospel are preaching against the craze, which seems to have the society butterflies in its grasp. Now that Lent is on, when the more public social functions like big dinners, dances, etc., are tabooed, the smart set and society generally have resorted to cards and bridge whist is the order morning, noon and night. It is the custom for the most exclusive, and therefore the most reckless clubs, to meet at ten o'clock in the morning, play until luncheon, and after luncheon play the rubber.

There are some very racy tales being told about the indulgence of this fashionable vice. For instance, there is the wife of a naval officer whose husband only has the rank of commander, and who is now off at sea, who has astounded the best circles this winter by the gorgeousness of her gowns and the smartness of her turnouts. Everybody knows that she has no fortune and that her husband has nothing but his salary, which is entirely inadequate to such style as she puts on. The secret of her fine dresses and carriages is said to lie in cleverness at bridge and phenomenal luck at any gambling game of cards.

The wife of a very prominent and wealthy ex-senator and her daughter came to Washington for the season. They had their allowance, which was very liberal, but the husband and father having learned by experience not to give them unlimited credit at his bank, did not count on their gambling debts. The two ladies left Washington a few days ago absolutely broke.

European Customs Introduced.



THESE whist clubs, it is claimed, are demoralizing society. The women have the gambling fever. Friendships have been ruined, for there is no such thing as friendship when it comes to forgiving a gambling debt. There are well founded rumors of official women being ostracised for what the sterner sex would denominate "welching" on debts incurred at the card table. Old ladies, middle-aged ladies and young ladies are all infected with the gambling virus. The games played in "good" society are not child's games by any means, and checks running into the hundreds and sometimes thousands of dollars are required to settle the score at the end of the game.

Not only are these whist tables going during the week days, but Sunday afternoons are devoted to the seductive game. This disregard for the American Sabbath was brought into Washington by the foreign diplomats, who set the pace in a good many things for the smart set here.

At the Austrian embassy there is the same wide open sort of performance on Sunday. There cards at all times are the favorite means of diversion. If a dinner or dance is given there are always card rooms open where those so inclined can try their luck. The favorite game in diplomatic circles, strange to say, is the old American game of draw poker. The foreigners take to this game with avidity because they can get quick action for their money, much quicker than they get at whist and other more fashionable games.

Attracts as Place of Residence.

THE attractions of the capital city as a place of residence are growing more and more. There are a great number of residents in Washington who were at one time part of its official life and who grew so much in love with the city that they made it their permanent home after they had left public life. Ex-senators and ex-members of the house can be met with by the score on Washington streets. Most of them are wealthy or have dropped into good departmental practice so they can live in the best circles and keep up their old acquaintance made when they were part of the government.

There are a great number of widows of former officials and senators who have elected to make Washington their permanent home. Mrs. Mark Hanna is to become a permanent resident here, leaving her beautiful home in Cleveland, where she and her distinguished husband lived for so many years.

Besides Mrs. Hanna, there are living here a great part of the year, Mrs. Hobart, widow of the late vice president, and Mrs. Payne, widow of the late postmaster general. Mrs. Dan Manning, widow of President Cleveland's first secretary of the treasury, also spends part of the winter here. Other widows of distinguished men who now make Washington their permanent home are: Mrs. Stanley Matthews, whose husband was an associate justice of the supreme court; Mrs. T. DeWitt Talmadge, Mrs. John Hay, Mrs. John A. Logan, Mrs. M. S. Quay and Mrs. Phil Sheridan.

Not Always Provident.

UNCLE SAM is not the most provident old fellow in the world. He is apt some times to be carried away by the penny wise and pound foolish practice. For instance, right in this city he is paying in rent for buildings needed for public service and for extra help necessary to keep up these buildings, enough each year to pay the interest on $35,000,000. If one-half of that $35,000,000 was spent in the erection of suitable buildings, every department would be well housed and ample room would be afforded for half a century to come. As it is, thousands of government clerks are compelled to work every day in unsanitary and often dangerous buildings while the general government is paying out this enormous annual sum for rents.

The visitor to Washington only sees the few big buildings that are the show places of the city, and he thinks that they are where all the government business is transacted. It will surprise him to learn that a great part of the work is done in make-shift buildings. It is rather startling to find out that the treasury department is scattered about in six buildings; the war department in nine buildings; the post office department in five; the agricultural department in 20; the department of commerce and labor in six; the department of justice in six and the district government in nine buildings. There is an annual outlay for rent of these buildings of $350,000 and an outlay for extra help, light and fuel of $297,000, making a total annual expense to the government of $647,000.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Road Building.

Mankato.—Railroad grading work in this section was resumed today. Contractor Thomas Brogan put 50 men and teams at work on the cut beyond Minneopa, for the new line of the Omaha road, and 60 men arrived last night to resume work on the big fill across a slough between Ottawa and St. Peter. The work of blasting through the rock at South Bend has continued uninterruptedly throughout the winter.

Balch & Co., of Minneapolis, are about to resume work on the Duluth, St. Cloud, Glencoe & Mankato road between Albert Lea and this city. The line will be built into Albert Lea, and it is expected that arrangements will be made for a joint use of the depot. The road is to be completed to Mankato this season, and perhaps beyond, if suitable traffic arrangements can be made for getting through the city.

The right of way has been purchased and paid for as far as Cream, in this county.

At Fair Grounds.

Hamline. — The genuine spring weather has stimulated both horses and horsemen to such an extent that they have made a regular descent upon the state fair grounds and a very few days will see a goodly number of horses in training at the grounds.

Secretary E. W. Randall has been besieged with applications for quarters in the speed barns and has already assigned a good many stalls. Those who have made arrangements are George R. Kibbe, H. W. Fagley, M. Collins, John Dowd, M. Blackmar and Frank Bundy of St. Paul; J. C. Scott, Mike Gannon, George Loomis and J. Brundage of Minneapolis; C. C. Dinehart of Slayton and James Carr and J. H. Peeper who make their headquarters at the fair grounds the year round.

State Loans.

St. Paul.—Loans from the state school fund were approved yesterday by the board of investment, amounting to $91,500. Several applications for large loans were turned down for various reasons. The loans granted were as follows:

District No. 87, Swift, $300; 91, Todd, $300; 120, Cottonwood, $800; 93, Houston, $800; 136, Wright, $1,200; 41, Lyon, $1,000; 22, Faribault, $10,000; 47, Kandiyohi, $12,500; 89, Martin, $11,000; 31, Wilkin, $5,000; 30, Wilkin, $5,000; 22, St. Louis, $4,000 (for new school at Virginia); village of Lowry, Pope county, $2,500, and the town of Springbrook, Kittson, $1,500.

Death of Hiler Horton.

St. Paul.—Hiler H. Horton, a member of the state senate and one of the best known public men in Minnesota, died at Nassau, in the Bahama islands, where he had gone to recover his health. Death was due to Bright's disease, which had been fastening its hold on him for years.

Senator Horton left St. Paul more than a month ago and went direct to Nassau, where he had a sister living. A few days later word was sent back that his illness had taken a serious turn, and Mrs. Horton went to join him. He sank rapidly after her arrival.

Elevators Burn.

Eden Valley.—Two grain elevators were burned to the ground here, causing a loss of about $20,000, covered in part by insurance. One elevator was owned by the Atlantic Elevator Company and contained 20,000 bushels of wheat, which was also destroyed. The other structure was the property of the Osborn-McMillan Company and was empty.

The origin of the fire is unknown.

A strong wind was blowing from the south and it required hard work of the fire department to prevent the spread of the flames to the village.

Immigrants.

St. Paul.—One hundred immigrants landed at the Union depot Sunday and during the past week a total of 400 have been placed in charge of John Anderson, the immigration agent.

The settlers this year are of a different class from previous years. They are mostly young men and youths, whose ages seem to range from 19 to 23 years of age. They are healthy-looking and well clad. They are not looking for city positions. When you ask them what they are going to do, they reply quickly, "We are going on a farm."

More Lid.

Minneapolis.—The "lid" was down on the pool rooms and billiard halls Sunday.

From midnight Saturday night until Monday morning every public pool and billiard room within the city limits, so far as is known, was closed as tight as the Sunday saloons. Like the proverbial new broom, Mayor Jones' latest order anent Sunday closing made a clean sweep, and whatever pool and billiard games took place in the city were played in private houses or private clubs.

News Notes.

St. Paul.—Lieut. William Peter's neck is dislocated while wrestling at the armory.

Minneapolis.—State board of health may be law unto itself in matters affecting public health.

Hamline.—Board of state fair managers decides on improvements at fair grounds.

St. Paul.—Last of the four Simmons paintings for dome of new capitol has been shipped.

Hamline.—Proposed improvement of University avenue has several features out of the ordinary.

There are many men yet living ho know of the devilish work the Molly Maguires in the min-g regions of Pennsylvania. There is a play called "Black iamond" which presents some atures of the times when the ollies held in awe the mining in-rests of Pennsylvania. Many ine operators and superintend-its died victims of this murder-us gang. It was left for a Pin-erton detective, James McPar-n, to join them and in disguise ascertain and expose the lead-s of the Mollies. Strange as it ay seem it is the same man, now 2 years old, who has brought to ght the criminals in the mining ots and turmoils of Colorado nd Idaho. Some men seem to ear a charmed life and escape anger where others perish.

CHANGING LOCATION.

The heavy rains of last week nd the terrible floods are cer inly discouraging to the reser-ation settlers, after all the wet eather of last season, but they hould remember that while they re suffering from the floods that he majority of the farmers of orthern Minnesota are as bad if ot worse off than they are. It s discouraging to see the season getting well towards the middle of the spring and no seeding lone, but you only have to go a ew miles west or southwest to ind the condition as bad or even worse than they are on this res-ervation. About the first thing hat a new homesteader farmer makes up his mind to do in a case of this kind is that he had better change his location and get into a place where the weather is more favorable, and the condition better. But where is that place? one man will say, it is right over there, but when you get over there the hot winds may wither your corn and you would wish you were back in northern Minnesota where there is plenty of rain. During a visit to Okla. eight years ago we met a man that had moved three times with a team from that Territory to this state and back, looking for a place where the weather was always favorable, but at last accounts he had not found it. Dont get discouraged over the unfavorable weather and sacrifice your claims to try to find a country where the weather is always favorable, for if you do you may come back to the same place in a few years looking for an opportunity to rent the farms that you now own, and again settle down beside your old neighbors who have stayed right here and are then the owners of their well improved farms that they have kept and made their home, while you have been looking for the land that flows with milk and honey.

AFTER STATE SENATOR.

E.J. Herringer of Ada is a candidate for the state senatorship to take the place now occupied by Senator Swedback. The district to be represented is Beltrami, Clearwater, Norman and Red Lake counties. The present representative, Luman C. Simons is also spoken of as a candidate.

Beltrami county is one of the largest of the counties in this district and her citizens should get busy and bring out their best timber for at least one of these places—Bemidji Pioneer.

In the mean time, whats the matter with H.E. Ives of St. Hilaire for Senator, or is he just supposed to always work for the good of the party, for the pleasure of being on the right side.

With the large increase in the population of Red Lake county it should be entitled to one of these places, but we don't expect to get it without hustling for it.

A Bungler.

Very few persons acquit themselves nobly in their maiden speech. At a wedding feast recently the bridegroom was called upon, as usual, to respond to the given toast, in spite of the fact that he had previously pleaded to be excused. Blushing to the roots of his hair, he rose to his feet. He intended to imply that he was unprepared for speech making, but, unfortunately, placed his hand upon the bride's shoulder and looked down at her as he stammered out his opening (and concluding) words:

"This—er—thing has been thrust upon me."—London Tit-Bits.

Oddities of Sight.

The two eyes really see two objects. If the two forefingers be held, one at the distance of one foot, the other two feet in front of the eyes and the former be looked at, two phantoms of the latter will be observed, one on each side. If the latter be regarded two phantoms of the nearer finger will be observed mounting guard, one on each side.

Good and Evil.

Accustom yourself to submit on every occasion to a small present evil to obtain a greater distant good. This will give decision, tone and energy to the mind, which thus disciplined will often reap victory from defeat and honor from repulse.—Colton.

Gallant.

"That pea will never come to perfection," remarked a young woman walking through a garden with Sydney Smith.

"Then let me lead perfection to the pea," said he gallantly offering her his arm.

The Dawn of Christmas.

Christmas day begins in the middle of the Pacific ocean on the one hundred and eightieth parallel of latitude, and there is where Santa Claus starts and ends his great and only journey of the year.

To Scrape an Acquaintance.

"To scrape an acquaintance" was originated by the Emperor Hadrian. Once when visiting the public bath he found an old veteran scraping himself with a piece of broken crockery in lieu of an iron or copper scraper. Hadrian gave him a sum of money to provide the necessary materials for a bath and on his next visit to the institution found it full of veterans scraping themselves with potsherds. "Scrape away, gentlemen, but you shall not scrape an acquaintance with me," was Hadrian's comment as he went out.

The Poet's Inconsistency.

"You speak of the brooks," said the critic as he looked over his friend's poem, "as the most joyous things in nature."

"So they are," said the poet.

"But you are inconsistent."

"Why?"

"Because later on you say they are ever murmuring."

Dodging Him.

Mr. Borem—I didn't see you last Sunday— Miss Cutting—Oh, you must have if you saw me at all! Mr. Borem—I—er—beg pardon. I don't understand. Miss Cutting—I say if you saw me Sunday you must have seen me last, for I was careful to see you first.—Philadelphia Press.

Severe Case.

"How did your sea voyage work, Bigley?"

"I was in such a state of collapse when I reached Liverpool that I cabled back to learn whether I had thrown up my job."

Mohammedan Sects.

Mohammedans divide themselves into two principal sects—Shiah and Sunni, the Persians representing the bulk of the former, the Turks of the latter. The chief points on which they differ are the condition of the soul after death and the succession of caliphs. "The Sunni belief is that there is one immortal God, whose works are without beginning or end, and that he will be visible to the souls of the blessed, while the Shiahs deny the immortality of the soul and maintain that the coexistent principles of Zoroaster will forever contend for the mastery." With regard to the prophet's successors, the Sunnis claim that the lawful successor of Mohammed was Abu Bekr and after him Omar, Osman and Ali, nephew and son-in-law of Mohammed. The Shiahs, however, reject the first three and hold that Ali was the only legitimate successor. Shiahs pray but three times a day and enjoin pilgrimages to Nejef, Kerbela, Kazimain, Meshed (Persia), Samara and Kum as well as to Mecca and Medina. Sunnis make pilgrimages only to the two latter cities and pray five times a day. From this it can be readily understood that the circumstances of the Turks being in possession of the shrines of Nejef (Meshed Ali), Kazimain and Kerbela is most displeasing to devout Shiahs.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Stay With It.

The first day mother sent me to school I went home at recess, thinking school was out. As I have grown older I find that a whole lot of people did the same thing, and the sad part of the affair is that too many of us never went back. In life be careful that you don't go home at recess. If you start to learn a trade or profession, stay by it and master it. Don't chase away at recess. If you have a business, attend to it. Don't go home at recess. This going home at recess has sent many a business man into bankruptcy. It has caused mothers' tears to flow and mother hearts to ache. It has made crusty old bachelors and sour old maids. It has filled worlds with ignorance and made barren deserts of fertile plains. Going home at recess means that you have fallen asleep at the switch and your train has plunged into the ditch. Always stay until school is out.—Osborne County (Kan.) Farmer.

The Air of London.

There is no fresh air in the heart of London, according to the conclusions of a recent investigator. He says: "No evidence of ozone was anywhere apparent except at Brownswood park, in the northeast. It was from the northeast quarter the wind was blowing, and the air had lost all trace of ozone before it had reached Hyde park. At Bushey park, although practically a country district, no ozone was present in the air. London had not only abstracted the goodness out of the air that swept over it, but had added to it the exhalations from the breath and bodies of millions of human beings and of tens of thousands of animals. Persons living within a one or two mile radius of Charing Cross cannot have fresh air entering their dwellings at any time."

Brides Priced.

To us it seems a curious whim on the part of our ancestors of the eighteenth century that in their marriage announcements they should so often choose and with such seeming complacency to enlighten the world with regard to the amount of fortune received with the brides. Here are two cases in point: "Mr. James Coutts of Jeffry's Sq., merchant, to Miss Peagrum of Knightsbridge, £30,000." "W. Smith, gentleman, of the 2d Troop of Horse Guards, to Mrs. Ann Gardiner, a maiden lady, aged, 'tis said, near 70, with a fortune of £20,000."—Chambers' Journal

Come and see us when yon are ready to prove up on your land.

Even J. Sund is working for P. Sullivan this week, assisting him in seeding.

Singer Bros. have a large stock of flour for sale at Rhoda, at rock bottom prices.

Singer bros. have the agency for The DeLevel cream seperator. The best on the market.

Stephen Singer, who has been staying at this place the past two weeks returned to his home at Rhoda.

Henry Peterson is cutting brush on The Sunbeam farm, and will keep the sythe going for the entire season.

Wallace Grace will break five acres this spring and seed it to flax. He expects to brake about 15 acres this season.

Henry Peterson floated up to this place Sunday evening and will assist us on The Sunbeam farm during the next two months.

The suckers have started to run and some of them are liable to get out on the prairie and get lost if the present high water continuous.

If you are in want of any seed pototaes this spring, call for them at Singer's store, where they have a hundred bushels of choice seed pototaes left for sale.

The Red Lake River has commenced to go down and if we do not get any more rain soon it will be down in its banks wher it belongs.

If you want a crow bar, shovel, spade, or in fact any thing in the line of hardware, or a strong pair of boots, call for it at Singer's store at Rhoda.

The farmers that have been trying to get an organaziation to build a boat on the Red Lake river are certainly having a streneuous time this spring in getting together.

Farmers, who are going to do fencing this spring should call on E. B. Laneger, at Plummer Pioneer Hardware Store, for all kinds of fencing. Will make prices right.

The wet spring is going to make it bad for the hay meadows that were not cut last year; as very few of them were burnt off last fall and the green grass will soon be to big to burn them this spring.

Chas. and Wm. Swanson came up from Rhoda, mostly by boat on a fishing trip Monday, they had no success and it would be necessary to have a gang of cow boys to find fish here now, with the river all over the country.

The farmers boat meeting was ajourned on last Saturday to meet at Kratka two weeks from tomorrow Saturday May 5th at 1 o'clock P.M. as the roads were so bad last Saturday that it was impossiable for any one to travel them. A full attendance of all share holders is requested on May 5th.

The mail carriers who have taken contracts to carry mail are wishing the other fellow had the job at present. Cheer up gentleman the bad roads will not always continue, and then you will have something to tell your children about how you carried mail in 1906 over the darnest roads they ever saw.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Eve are rejoiceing over the arrival of a son which came to make his home with them on Monday evening last. This makes eight boys in the family the oldest being 14 years of age. Mr. Eves is certainly doing their share towards furnishing men for the future armies and navys of America.

The warm weather of the past week has started the green grass to growing at a rapid rate.

Mrs. A. W. Shuston and Mrs. J. M. Kelly visited at Miss Augusta Kuebnel Wednesday.

The water is reported to be going down over in the town of Equality now so it is only about two feet deep on the level prairie.

CARD OF THANKS

I wish to extend my sincere thanks to the kind friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted my family and my self in our late beroavement and particulary to Rev. E. A. Mostue who exposed himself to the danger of crossing the Red Lake River, in order to attend to the last sad rites at the burial of my husband.

"Dew Ponds."

Among the most singular archaeological remains found in Great Britain are the ancient "dew ponds," the construction of which is ascribed to people of the Neolithic age. The purpose of these ponds was to furnish drinking water for cattle. An exposed position, where springs were absent, was selected, and a broad, hollowed surface was formed and covered over with straw or some other nonconducting material. Above was spread a thick layer of clay strewn with stones. During the night the cold surface of the clay caused an abundance of moisture to condense from the lower layers of the air. Some of these ancient dew ponds are still in working order.

Why Life Preservers Are Useless.

"On my ship," said the captain, "the stewards, the first day out, go to every passenger and show just how the life preservers are put on.

"The steward first says:

"'Excuse me, sir, but do you know how to manipulate a life preserver?'

"'Why, yes; I suppose so,' the passenger replies.

"'Then, sir, if you please,' says the steward, getting a preserver down. And he hands it to the passenger to put on.

"The passenger, nine times out of ten, either puts the life preserver on wrong or can't put it on at all. So the steward shows him how to do it. He is impressed and grateful.

"The life preservers, in a shipwreck, would be of little use, for nearly all the passengers would be unable to get into them. There should be a maritime law requiring a passengers' drill with the preservers every voyage, so that each passenger in a catastrophe would know how to save himself with the means placed at his disposal. As things are now, there might as well be no life preservers on ships."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The Costliest Canes.

"A single joint malacca cane will always fetch from $400 to $500," said the dealer.

"Why?"

"Because malacca hardly ever grows with enough space between the joints to make a single joint stick. Usually the joints are not more than a foot apart. When you find in Singapore—that is where malacca comes from—a piece of malacca with the joints five feet apart, so that it will make a single joint stick, come to me, and I will give you $500 for it. Malacca sticks with the joints three feet apart are worth $30 or $40. Snakewood sticks, if they are marked well—snakewood comes from British Guiana—are worth $40 or $50. A yellow ebony stick—ebony comes to us in logs from Ceylon and Mauritius—is worth $20 or $25. Wanghee, from China, makes an excellent and costly stick. A perfect wanghee is worth $20."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Persian Peasants.

There is probably no peasantry in the world so ground down as the Persian. The agricultural laborer there, as in China, never tries to ameliorate his condition for the simple reason that if he earns more more is taken away from him by the rulers of the land. The general condition of the laboring classes, however, does not seem to be so bad as might be supposed. In a country so vast (550,000 square miles) and so thinly populated (5,500,000 in all) a small and sufficient supply of food is easily raised, especially with such prolific soil at the command of the poorest. At Shiraz there are two harvests in the year. The seifi, sowed in summer and reaped in autumn, consists of rice, cotton, Indian corn and garden produce, and the tchatoi is sowed in October and November and reaped from May till July. This is exclusively wheat and barley. Here also grow grapes, oranges and pomegranates, for which latter Shiraz is famed.

The Color of Flames.

You have often noticed the many tinted bars and bands that rise in the shape of "forked tongues of flames" from wood burning in the grate. It is ten to one, however, that you never have thought to figure on the cause of the variegated hues presented by flames. To bring the matter quickly to the point, we will say that the many colors are the result of combustion among the different elements of the wood. The light blue is from the hydrogen and the white from the carbon; the violet is from the manganese, the red from the magnesia and the yellow from the soda, which are constituent parts of the wood.

The First Man Dressmaker.

As far back as 1730 there was in Paris a man dressmaker, probably the first of his kind. His name was Rhomberg, and he was the son of a Bavarian peasant from the neighborhood of Munich. He owed his success to his genius for concealing and remedying defects of figure. He drove a beautiful carriage on the boulevard and had an escutcheon in the shape of a pair of corsets and an open pair of scissors painted on the panel of each door. He left a large fortune to his heirs.

Doctors and Solemnity.

The days are past when every self respecting doctor was expected to dress in a style tastefully blending the divine with the undertaker. But a "sustained and impenetrable solemnity" is still a priceless possession for those who would achieve success in medicine. If this is a natural gift, so much the better; if not, it should be acquired at any cost.—British Medical Journal.

For Its Vocabulary's Sake.

"Indirectly, more forcibly sometimes than directly," said a senator, "a man may be accused."

"Thus a good woman of Cincinnati called her cook one morning and said:

"'Mary, come and take the parrot out of the bedroom at once. The master has lost his collar button.'"

The Difference.

Mr. Wholesale—Want a job, eh? What can you do? Applicant—Nothing. Mr. Wholesale—Say, you don't want a "job." What you want is a "position."—New York Press.

A man who goes to law may not be in the poor suitor class when he starts, but is liable to be before he finishes.—Washington Star.

Who rises every time he falls will sometimes rise to stay.—Morris.

How to Tell if Worsted or Woolen Cloths Are Adulterated.

Worsted cloths are less often adulterated than woolens and are more easily detected. A cotton worsted is a lie on the face of it, for the cotton stands out with prominence. But often a cotton thread is twisted with a worsted thread, and to determine its presence it is only necessary to take the twist out of the thread and then examine its component parts.

Cotton, having a long staple, can be carded and combed with wool to be spun into worsted yarn. This is done to cheapen the cost of production. Cotton is carded and spun with wool and shoddy, not so much to cheapen the yarn, for cotton is generally as expensive as some shoddies, but is introduced to give strength or spinning qualities to the stock. In many cases the shoddy is of such short staple that it would not stand the drawing in spinning, and, as it would make the cost of the yarn too high to put in enough wool to give that lacking strength; cotton is put in for this purpose.

The percentage of cotton in a fabric can be determined in this manner: Take a small piece of cloth and weigh it. Now boil it for five minutes in a 5 per cent solution of caustic soda. Take out what is left, and, if any, it is all cotton. The wool will all be dissolved. The percentage of shoddy cannot be determined except by experience.

A cloth or yarn with shoddy in it is easily detected by its feel. Cloth made of all new wool is softer feeling than one containing shoddy, for the latter has lost that new, soft, springy feel peculiar to wool.—American Wool and Cotton Reporter.

Success Prolongs Life.

It is now well known that increased complexity of life with increased expenditure distinctly aids longevity. Luxury, "the fertile parent of a whole family of diseases," modifies it greatly, of course, but this is a manageable factor, says the London Chronicle. We have only to recall personal experience to realize the force of intellectual stimulation. The interest of sport will sustain men without fatigue for distances they otherwise could not traverse. The excitement of strife will often mask the presence of wounds. Self forgetfulness in all the walks of life, under the stress of love, chivalry or accepted duty, doubles human endurance. Success gives new vitality, new powers, and this is another name for new life.

No Notion of Real Trouble.

"I bet I get into more trouble than any man in this state," volunteered the young fellow who had come in the clubhouse. "Nothing in the trouble line overlooks me. Why, I'd be afraid to marry"—

"What! Ain't you married?" ejaculated the red nosed elderly party who was hovering over the gratis lunch. "Boy, you don't know what trouble is."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Ranter—I made a speech at the banquet last night, and you didn't print a line of it.

A Rare Case.

Sorroughs—I'm always expecting disaster, but still the unexpected happened to me once. Cheerfule—How was that? Sorroughs—When the calamity came nobody remembered to say, "I told you so."—Houston Chronicle.

The Only Sure Way.

"Say, old man," said the soulful young man, "what's the best way to find out what a woman thinks of you?" "Marry her," replied Peckham promptly.—Catholic Standard and Times.

The Golden Crested Wren.

The golden crested wren is the smallest not only of British but of all European birds. Its average weight is only about eight grains troy. The length of the feathers is about three and a half inches and the stretch of the wings about five inches, but when the feathers are taken off the length of the body does not exceed one inch.

Freshness of Youth.

He was a respectable looking man, and, judging from his appearance, he was a butcher by trade, and this belief was verified a few minutes later. He carried a white apron under his arm, and as he entered a car a huge cleaver dropped from the bundle to the floor. A youth who had not reached the age of discretion sank out merrily, "Say, mister, you dropped your pocket-knife." The passengers laughed, but they could not help but think that the youth took a long chance on kidding a man with a cleaver.—Albany Journal.

A PRECARIOUS CONDITION.

Many Women Suffer Daily Miseries and Don't Know the Reason.

Women who are languid, suffer backache and dizzy spells, should read carefully the experience of Mrs. Laura Sullivan, Bluff and Third Sts., Marquette, Mich., who says: "I had backache and bearing-down pain, and at times my limbs would swell to twice natural size. I could hardly get up or down stairs, and often could not get my shoes on. Beginning to use Doan's Kidney Pills I got relief before I had used half a box, but continued taking them until cured. The bloating subsided and I was well again."

Sold by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Magistrate Who Can Tell the Calling of Persons by Distinguishing Marks.

"A man's occupation," said a magistrate, "marks him so unmistakably that I can tell at a glance what he does for a living.

"There is, for instance, the violinist. You can tell a violinist from the fact that he carries his head to one side.

"The groom and the cavalryman have bow legs, and, when they stand still they hold their legs wide apart, as though there was a horse between them.

"The painter may be detected by the mark of the palette hole in his thumb.

"The pianist's enormous hands identify him. From constant practice they become abnormal. Weber, you know, could stretch two octaves.

"Men who work amid the vapors of mercury, copper or arsenic have a green mucous membrane, and greenish hair and skin.

"The players of flutes and clarinets have thick, distended cheeks and tough and leathery lips.

"The scrubbers of floors have swollen knees, and often, afflicted with the disease called housemaid's knee, they limp."

SKIN ERUPTIONS 35 YEARS.

Suffered Severely with Eczema All Over Body—A Thousand Thanks to Cuticura Remedies.

"For over thirty-five years I was a severe sufferer from eczema. The eruption was not confined to any one place. It was all over my body, limbs, and even on my head. I am sixty years old and an old soldier, and have been examined by the Government Board over fifteen times, and they said there was no cure for me. I have taken all kinds of medicine and have spent large sums of money for doctors, without avail. A short time ago I decided to try the Cuticura Remedies, and after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap, two boxes of Cuticura Ointment, and two bottles of Cuticura Resolvent, two treatments in all, I am now well and completely cured. A thousand thanks to Cuticura. I cannot speak too highly of the Cuticura Remedies. John T. Roach, Richmondale, Ross Co., Ohio, July 17, 1905."

Total Failure.

Mr. Ferguson was in a high state of indignation.

"Laura," he said, "what have you been doing to my new safety razor? It's ruined."

"I didn't know it was a razor, George," answered Mrs. Ferguson. "Norah tried for half an hour to slice potatoes with it, and then gave it up. She says it's of no account."—Chicago Tribune.

To Clean Cane-Seated Chairs.

Cane-seated chairs may be cleaned by washing the cane on both sides with warm Ivory Soap suds, and then putting them out in the sun to dry. This treatment not only adds to the cleanliness of the cane but causes it to shrink, which improves its appearance and makes it more wear-resisting. ELEANOR R. PARKER.

HORTICULTURE

GRAFTS FOR FRUIT TREES.

How the Various Kinds Are Performed and the Best Time to Do the Work.

Grafting is the art of bringing together the parts of two plants that they will unite. Usually a portion of the last year's growth of one plant, with a length of four or five inches, called a scion, is united with another plant, called the stock, either on the root, at the collar, or on the trunk or branches. Grafting may be employed for several purposes: (1) To reproduce non-seed-bearing varieties, or those that do not come true from seed; (2) to increase the vigor or hardiness of weak and tender sorts; (3) to bring slow-bearing kinds into earlier fruitfulness; (4) to change varieties.

Grafting is generally performed at the beginning of the season's growth. At that time dormant buds can be produced, and although the union would take place more quickly after the sap becomes thickened, the chance of failure will be greater at that time, owing to the evaporation from the leaves. The method employed depends to some extent upon the size and kind of tree upon which it is to be used.

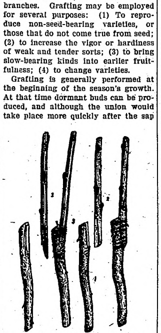

Fig. 1. Root Whip Graft; 1, root; 2, scion; 3, complete graft. Fig. 2. Root Veneer Graft; 1, stock; 2, scion; 3, complete graft.

The form commonly used upon small trees is known as the whip or tongue graft. It is especially adapted for root-grafting. Fig. 1. The stock (1) is cut off at an angle, and a shaving of the bark and wood is removed from the lower side of the end; a tongue is then cut near the end. The scion is prepared by cutting off the lower end so that the exposed surface will be about one inch long. (2) In the middle of this a tongue is cut. The tongues on the stock and scion are then fitted together so that the inner bark on one side of the scion will be in contact with that on the same side of the stock. The graft should then be bound firmly together. (3) This may be done either with waxed twine, paper or cloth. These are prepared by dipping the string or cloth in melted grafting wax, and, in the case of paper, by applying the wax with a brush. The twine answers for root-grafts, but the paper or cloth should be used where the grafts are above ground, unless grafting wax is used with the twine. For stem-grafting this method succeeds best where the stocks are from one-fourth to one-half inch in diameter. The scion should be about three inches long, with a bud near the end, as in Figs. 1, 2.

When used for root grafts the scions should be five inches in length and the root about four inches. From a good seedling, two stocks for root grafts can be obtained. These grafts are made during the winter, and are then tied in bundles and packed in sand in a cool cellar. By spring a perfect union will have formed, and a callous will appear at the lower end of the root from which rootlets will soon appear after the root graft has been planted.

Although not in common use, a form known as veneer grafting has much merit for small stocks, either for root or stem-grafting. It is shown in Fig. 2, the parts being the same as in the illustration of whip-grapting. Its merit comes from the fact that cambium surface only is exposed, which makes it possible for a more perfect union to take place than when the pith is exposed, as in tongue-grafting. Greater care is required, however, to bring the parts into the close contact which must be secured in order to attain success.

THE ORCHARD.

Close attention to weeds will keep the plants growing.

Buy only varieties of trees you know something about.

We use pure white lead and oil for painting the stubs on pruned trees.

Paint all wounds as soon as dry enough to receive paint. This stops evaporation and preserves the wood until it has time to heal over.

Several trees are averse to transplanting, and rarely do well. Of these the walnut, hickory and chestnut are notable examples. The nuts of these should be planted where the trees are wanted.

A number of years ago I planted my roadside with Baldwin apples, and have since picked 300 barrels from it in a single season. This added a nice profit to the farm account, says an Illinois farmer.

FOR NERVOUS PEOPLE

A Michigan Mother Preserved to Her Family by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

When the blood is impoverished the nerves starve and neuralgia or something more serious swiftly follows. Nervous people are generally pale people. By supplying through the blood those vital elements that the nerves need, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People have performed those remarkable cures that make it impossible for any nervous sufferer to neglect them.

A recent case is that of Mrs. Peter Morrissette, of No. 315 Eleventh street, Alpena, Mich., who writes as follows: "My trouble started with childbirth. After one of my children was born I had a kind of paralysis. I was very weak and my mouth was a little crooked. I was always tired and was so nervous that I could not bear to hear a dog bark or a bell ring—even the little bird in its cage would annoy me. My heart fluttered a great deal and I had dizzy spells. I was not able to be left alone.

"My doctor gave me different kinds of medicine, changing it several times. When it was evident that he could not help me he said he did not understand my case. This was three years ago and I was very much discouraged, when my brother, who had taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, recommended them to me. I tried them and noticed a change for the better when I was taking the second box. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cured me and I have been well ever since. I now do all my own housework, sewing and washing for seven of us."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have also cured diseases caused by impure or impoverished blood such as rheumatism, anæmia and after-effects of the grip.

All druggists sell Dr. Williams' Pink Pills or the remedy will be mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

RELIGIOUS RUMOR.

The New York federation of churches, which has been in existence for ten years, is out of debt for the first time in its history. It is spending more than $16,000 a year in its work.

Indianapolis will have the international meeting of Young Men's Christian association societies, which brings together between 800 and 1,000 workers from the United States, Canada and Mexico, next May.

Native Protestant Christians in India have formed a national home missionary society to evangelize their own country. The society will be administered wholly by Indian natives, in harmony with existing Christian churches in that land.

The Congregationalists are raising now about $200,000 a year for church extension, but not satisfied with that are starting a movement to insure $500,000 being raised. There are 500 congregations of their denomination in this country.

There are more than 2,000,000 negro Baptists in this country, with 50 institutions of learning and 45 denominational papers. They have a national organization, with boards for missions, home and foreign, education, publication and the young people's societies.

AMONG ARTISTS.

Ten eminent Japanese artists were busy for months devising a seal for the young crown prince of their country. This is now put on everything he wears or uses.

A recent exposition in Amsterdam of 20 new paintings by Josef Israels bore witness to the fact that this eminent Jewish artist, at the age of 80, preserves the best traits of his manhood powers.

Heinrich Vogel, a well-known German portrait painter, who, however, has not done any work for three decades, has left his whole property, valued at $250,000, for the founding of a charitable institution for artists.

Japanese postage stamps are rated as the most artistic in the world; there is a great demand for them in London at present. The first stamps were issued in 1871. There are few rare ones, the highest price ever known to have been paid for one being $50.

A WOMAN DOCTOR

Was Quick to See That Coffee Poison Was Doing the Mischief.

A lady tells of a bad case of coffee poisoning and tells it in a way so simple and straightforward that literary skill could not improve it.

"I had neuralgic headaches for 12 years," she says, "and have suffered untold agony. When I first began to have them I weighed 140 pounds, but they brought me down to 110. I went to many doctors and they gave me only temporary relief. So I suffered on, till one day in 1904, a woman doctor told me to drink Postum Food Coffee. She said I looked like I was coffee poisoned.

"So I began to drink Postum and I gained 15 pounds in the first few weeks and am still gaining, but not so fast as at first. My headache began to leave me after I had used Postum about two weeks—long enough I expect to get the coffee poison out of my system.

"Now that a few months have passed since I began to use Postum Food Coffee, I can gladly say that I never know what a neuralgic headache is like any more, and it was nothing but Postum that cured me. Before I used Postum I never went out alone; I would get bewildered and would not know which way to turn. Now I go alone and my head is as clear as a bell. By brain and nerves are stronger than they have been for years." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

MINNESOTA ITEMS.

St. Peter.—St. Peter's lid is screwed on tight by voters.

Gaylord.—Business men have organized a commercial club, with a membership of thirty-five.

East Grand Forks.—The Tri-State Telephone Co. was defeated in its efforts to get a franchise here.

Chatfield.—The city election passed off very quietly yesterday. License carried by forty-five majority.

Stillwater.—The site for the proposed new state prison has been deeded to the state and the property owners paid.

Duluth.—Navigation opened at the Head of the Lakes when the Booth line steamer Bon Ami cleared for north shore points.

St. Cloud.—A commercial club was organized last evening at the auditorium of the public library, with a membership of 120.

Little Falls.—Samuel Jackson, of this city, was killed by an accident in a saw mill at Wycliffe, B. C., where he had secured employment only a few days ago.

Pelican Rapids.—This thriving little city has been selected for the gathering of the Minnesota district of Norwegian Lutheran synod to be held during the week of June 20.

Hayfield.—Nels Pederson, eighty-four years old, homeless and without relatives, ended his life by taking morphine at the farm house of J. J. Peterson, northeast of here.

Minneapolis.—The estate of the late John E. Grimes, of Minneapolis, was certified to the state auditor today for payment of the inheritance tax. The estate is appraised at $21,365.41, and the tax will be $56.89.

Winona.—On the first of May Winona will have a board to control the water works and the sewerage systems, and these two municipal departments will then be taken out of the control of the city council.

Mankato.—Chief of Police Donohue notified the proprietors of slot machines that the giving of cash prizes would no longer be tolerated. An agitation has been started to do away with the machines altogether.

Madella.—The Woodmen picnic of the combined Southern and Southwestern associations is to be held here June 21. This is the first time that the two associations have held their picnic at the same place.

Eveleth.—Lost in the old workings of the Adams mine, which he was traversing with the supposed intention of making an exit at shaft No. 2, Walter Ojki, a Finn, about 30 years of age, met with deadly gas.

Stillwater.—Deals have been closed for all the land required for the new state prison site at South Stillwater, comprising 156 acres, and for the land needed to give right-of-way for a spur track to the factory buildings.

Hastings.—R. W. Miller and Kent Moore of the Twenty-eighth infantry were brought from Fort Snelling, having been held to the grand jury for alleged larceny of a horse which, it is said, they drowned in the Minnesota river.

Bemidji.—Section men discovered the dead and badly mutilated body of an Indian about 50 years old, lying beside the railroad track a quarter of a mile west of Rosby. Both legs had been severed, one above the knee and the other near the foot.

St. Peter.—There is an exodus of business men from the village of Vernon Center, Blue Earth county. Many of its largest mercantile establishments are to be transported to a small town on the northwestern frontier of Canada.

St. Paul.—The state live stock and sanitary board, according to the quarterly report issued yesterday, has found numerous cases of rabies, and many horses, cattle, and sheep have been infected by being bitten by mad dogs, and have died.

Little Falls.—Lucas Schrieber, a West Side saloonkeeper, who was arrested on a charge of allowing a minor to frequent his resort, pleaded guilty in police court and paid a fine. Schrieber was arrested as an example to the saloon men of the city.

Monticello.—James Nugent, the Wright county farmer, serving a life sentence at Stillwater, for killing his 14-year-old daughter, will be liberated on parole within six months, and at the age of 64 will leave the prison and go home to join his faithful wife.

Mankato.—The third annual exhibition of the Minnesota Art Society is in progress here. The exhibit is displayed at the new Carnegie library building, where a hundred oil paintings by leading artists are on exhibition, besides sculpture, fancy work and arts and crafts.

Northfield.—The Carleton Glee club left today for the annual Easter vacation tour. Nine concerts will be given in southern Minnesota, one in South Dakota and one in Northfield. The club is unusually strong and has a fine program of popular college glees interspersed with classical selections.

Winona.—Provided right freight rates can be secured, the manufacture of machines for saving flour gold and for placer mining will be undertaken in Winona on a large scale at the W. L. Hardwick machine foundry, by the Hardwick & Weeds company backed to the extent of $150,000.

Bemidji.—Section men discovered the fire the fatal shot that killed Rude Tankovitch at West Duluth March 4, but he was convicted of manslaughter in the first degree nevertheless. Matt Vranes fired the shot and was lately convicted of murder in the third degree, but his testimony that Ivankovitch had handed him the revolver with a command to shoot Tankovitch convicted Ivankovitch.

St. Paul.—Julius H. Block's formal announcement as a candidate for governor was made public. The big state treasurer has been in training for the contest a good while, but deferred his formal entry until the state convention call had been issued.

Madella.—The Woodmen picnic of the combined Southern and Southwestern associations is to be held here June 21. Governor Johnson will deliver an address. Ten bands have promised to be in attendance.

Little Canada.—Louis Pepin, a descendant of the pioneer after whom Lake Pepin was named, shot himself in the nose while hunting.

MEN AND MATRIMONY.

When a man strikes bad luck he indulges in the most glowing of good resolutions.

The engaged girl takes delight in telling how long she will be away on her bridal tour.

Men are extravagant to the verge of recklessness for at least three months after the marriage ceremony.

From Sumatra, the Rhenish Missionary society reports a year of harvest such as it has never before seen. The number of pagans baptized during the year was 4,712, besides 136 Mohammedans. The total of Christians is now 61,764. In 301 schools, 14,519 boys and girls are under instruction.

THREE FACTS

For Sick Women To Consider

FIRST.—That almost every operation in our hospitals performed upon women becomes necessary through neglect of such symptoms as backache, irregular and painful periods, displacements of the female organs, pain in the side, burning sensation in the stomach, bearing-down pains, nervousness, dizziness and sleeplessness.

SECOND.—The medicine that holds the record for the largest number of absolute cures of female ills is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It regulates, strengthens and cures diseases of the female organism as nothing else can.

For thirty years it has been helping women to be strong, curing backache, nervousness, kidney troubles, inflammation of the female organs, weakness and displacements, regulating the periods perfectly and overcoming their pains. It has also proved itself invaluable in preparing women for childbirth and the change of life.

THIRD.—The great volume of unsolicited and grateful testimonials on file at the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., many of which are from time to time published by permission, give absolute evidence of the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Mrs. Pinkham's advice.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women.—Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women only. From symptoms given, your trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Mrs. Pinkham is daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and for twenty-five years under her direction and since her decease she has been advising sick women free of charge. Out of the vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Surely, any woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.

HIGH WIND CAUSES RENEWAL OF FIRE AT SAN FRANCISCO

FIERCE BLAZE ON WATER FRONT

Hopes That the Conflagration Had Been Checked Dashed by the Arising of Gale of Great Velocity.

SUFFERING IS BORNE WITH THE UTMOST FORTITUDE

People Unanimous in Making the Best of the Situation---Food Supply Scanty, but in Sufficient Quantity to Prevent Absolute Famine.

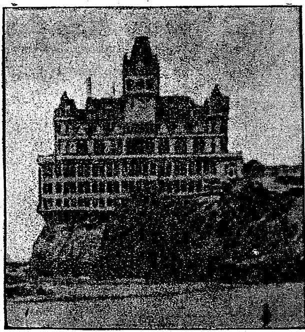
San Francisco, April 21.—Late Friday night the fire was raging over fifty acres of the water front between Bay street and the end of Meiggs and Fisherman's wharf.. To the eastward it extended down to the sea wall, but had not reached the piers, which lie a quarter of a mile toward the east.

Flames and smoke hid from view the vessels that lay off shore.. No water was available except from the water side, and it was not until almost dark that the fire department was able to turn its attention to this point.

San Francisco, April 21.—From confidence in the belief that the fire which for 70 hours had worked its will on their fair city had been checked, the people of San Francisco were plunged into new despair yesterday afternoon when a wind of high velocity, coming from the northwest, blew over the fire-stricken district. Driven by the wind the flames quickly neared the water front, threatening to cut off communication with Oakland and Berkeley.

Gen. Custer at once ordered a squadron of men to endeavor to keep back the fire which, spreading in this direction, bid fair to destroy the Union ferry depot, the only means of egress from the city.

CLIFF HOUSE, WHICH FELL INTO THE SEA.



This famous resort was located at Point Lobas, facing the Pacific, adjacent to the Golden Gate. The rocks opposite are known as seal rocks and are frequented by the animals for which they are named. The quake toppled the building into the occan.

The Postal Telegraph company was forced to abandon its temporary offices in the Ferry building, already scorched by the flames.

The water front emergency hospital, confidently believed to be a place of safety, was in the gravest danger, and the officers in charge made hasty preparations to move from their quarters.

The wind was of such velocity that brick and granite walls, already weakened by the earthquake and subsequent fire, were falling into the streets. The gravest fear was that Market street, the principal avenue of escape from the city to the ferry, would be blocked up, ending all possibility of egress.

Thought Conflagration Ended.

When daylight appeared on the ruins Friday hope of saving anything from Telegraph Hill to Golden Gate park was slight. Fringes of houses about the base of the hill, left standing, were attacked by the conflagration, which was driven back by a veering wind. Everything on Van Ness avenue and west seemed doomed, while the main fire at Octavia street, with its destroying advance wedges, seemed too formidable to be stopped. At the farthermost south line of the burned district a fitful wind seemed likely to spread the flames to the hills and cacti sand heaps.

But when despair was deepest and refugees from the remaining part of the residence district began to drag their effects into sand hollows, Octavia street sent the joyful message "Fire stopped!" Artillery had roared and dynamite made holes without avail where once stood the most beautiful homes of Nob Hill. But great hopes were centered in the efficacy of an intervening burned area.

Desolation on Market Street.

Not even the desolation of Market street and the banking and business district seemed as terrible as that of the roads leading from the ferry north and around the shore of the bay as far as Fort Mason. Vehicles of all kinds, including baby carriages that broke down under abnormal weights, are strewn along the way. Household effects, clothing and valuables of all kinds abandoned by the terror-stricken owners are where they left them. Some day the owners may claim them. The soldiers permit no looting.

Rear Admiral McCalla, commandant at the Mare Island navy yard, reported that the war ships under construction at the Union Iron works were not damaged. In his report to Washington the admiral said the loss of life had been exaggerated.

"No estimate of the loss of life is at hand," said one of the committee of safety. "We hope it is not as some have feared. The fire now practically is under control, having been checked west of Van Ness avenue and in the Mission. North of Russian Hill it is raging toward the bay, but it will not spread west. The destitute need relief. After the living are cared for the dead will be ennumerated."

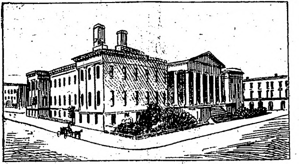
Hungry People Aid Firemen.

Thousands of refugees were without food and water. In sheer desperation they aided the fire and dynamite men at Van Ness avenue until they fell in their tracks from exhaustion. Finally they were cheered by military regulations for their succor. Bakeries were started in the ruins, great masses of half-charred wood from the homes of millionaires being used to heat the ovens. Oakland bakeries were worked overtime and every available boat was pressed into service to bring the supplies over the bay. More bread and plenty of milk for the weak and sickly children and women refugees was the cry.

Five hundred thousand pounds of canned beef in the warehouses of Swift & Co. at South San Francisco were moved into the refugee camps.

Face Horror with Fortitude.

Homeless and starving the people of San Francisco are facing the awful calamity with a spirit of fortitude which must command the admiration of the world. There are no evidences of weakness among the crowds moving back reluctantly upon each advance of the flames, which continue to sweep toward the ocean. Conquered for the moment, but undaunted, the bravery exhibited by men, women and children in the face of overwhelming disaster is that of a race destined to arise stronger than ever out of the ruins which surround it.



United States Mint.

There is little left of the great American metropolis by the Golden Gate. Shorn of its many glories, its palaces and vast commercial emporiums leveled to the earth, its wide area of homes in ashes, it will rise again in still greater magnificence, a monument to the courage and indomitable spirit shown by its inhabitants in the present awful emergency.

Can't Save Residence District.

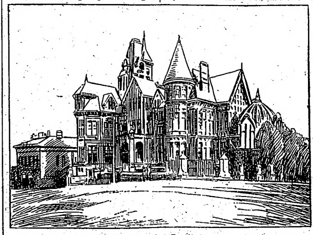
There seems little hope of saving the choicest residence section, lying west and north of Van Ness avenue. The men of the fire department, who have done splendid work, are making strenuous efforts to check the devouring flames, but without avail. Owing to the tremendous heat structures for some distance from the fire are as dry as tinder and they seem to disappear like a flash the minute the flames reach them.

The hills and beaches of San Francisco look like an immense tented city. For miles through the park and along the beaches from Ingleside to the sea wall at North Beach the homeless are camped in tents, makeshifts rigged up from a few sticks of wood and a blanket or a sheet. A few of the more fortunate, with better transportation facilities than were afforded the majority of the victims of the catastrophe, managed to pile tents on vehicles and are therefore more comfortably housed.

Looks Like Camp Ground.

Golden Gate Park and the Panhandle look like one vast camping ground. It is said that fully 100,000 persons, rich and poor, sought refuge in Golden Gate park alone. Fully 200,000 more homeless ones located at the other places of refuge.

Portsmouth square has served many notable and some sensational uses, but none more so, probably, than that to which it was put when it became for the time being a public morgue.



Hopkins Art Institute.

Between 20 and 80 corpses were laid side by side upon the trodden grass for lack of a more suitable place.

It is said that when the flames threatened to reach the square the dead, mostly unknown, were removed to Columbia square, where they were buried, when danger threatened that quarter.

Forced to Bury Dead.

Out at the Presidio soldiers pressed into service all men who came near and forced them to labor at burying the dead. So thick were the corpses piled up that they were becoming a menace, and the order was issued to bury them at any cost. The soldiers were needed for other work, and at the point of rifles citizens were compelled to take to the task of burial. Some objected at first, but the troops stood no trifling, and every man who came in reach was forced to labor at least one hour.. Rich men who had never done much work stood by the side of workmen digging trenches in the sand for those who fell in the awful calamity. At the present writing many remain unburied, and the soldiers are still pressing men into service.

Docks Used as Hospital.

The Folsom street dock was turned into a temporary hospital, the harbor hospital being unable to accommodate all the injured who were brought there.

About 100 patients were stretched on the dock at one time. Thursday evening tugs conveyed them to Goat island, where they were lodged in the hospital. The docks from Howard street to Folsom street have been saved, and the fire at this point was not permitted to creep farther east than Main street.

To add to the horrors of the situation, and the general alarm explosions of sewer gas shook many streets. A Vesuvius in minature was created by such an upheaval at Bryant and eighth streets. Cobblestones were hurled 20 feet upward and dirt blew out of the ground.

The only bank in the huge ruined district that escaped destruction was the Market Street bank, at the corner of Seventh and Market streets. It is in the gutted Grand building, but the firemen saved the ground floor. It will pay out money just as soon as it hears from the Clearing house officials.

A corner of the city near the Pacific mail wharves at Second and Brannan streets, was not ruined, and the sailors' home is intact. The Postal Telegraph company has restored its cable connection with the orient by establishing a station at Ocean Beach, but there is no service yet for delivering messages there.

Many Killed by Crazed Cattle.

A series of fatalities took place Thursday as the result of the stampeding of a herd of cattle at Sixth and Folsom streets. Thre hundred of the panic-stricken animals ran when they saw and felt the flames and charged wildly down the street, trampling under foot all who were in the way. One man was gored through and through by a maddened bull. At least a dozen persons, it is said, were killed.

Shock Empties Wells.

A feature of San Francisco was the many wells and cisterns upon which thousands of residents depended for water for drinking and cooking. Every earthquake has affected these cisterns and wells. Water in many of them disappeared and did not return for months. The earthquake of Wednesday had the same effect, and this accounts, in part at least, for the scarcity of water after the shocks. While the city pipe system suplied a large number of office buildings and dwellings, thousands of people were dependent upon wells, and these may not be full of water again for several months.

Reports of babes being born in the refuge camps were frequently received. Five women became mothers in Golden Gate park.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Fake Spirit Trapped.

Minneapolis — Cowering with fear and imploring mercy from every lineament of their palid faces, Mr. and Mrs. C. Amundson, 1125 Sixth street southeast, were exposed at a private seance, and the mask was lifted so effectively that both confessed that they had been deceiving the public for years.

While the spirit of "Bob Kelly," a sailor, who was supposed to have died 1,500 years ago, was cavorting about the parlor floor, one of the spectators in the mystic circle leaped from his seat to embrace the ethereal Kelly, and clasped instead the living Mrs. C. Amundson, dressed in black tights and her bust draped with a veil of white silk. A struggle followed. There was a crash of breaking lamps, mingled with the groans of those who thought they had communed with the spirits of their departed loved ones, until a pocket searchlight was turned upon the quivering form of Mrs. Amundson and another revealed the blanched face of Mr. Amundson.

Land Sales.

Duluth—The state land sales which were held in northern Minnesota resulted in the sale of big tracts of state lands to Minnesota farmers, and to settlers from other states. A sale at Brainerd disposed of 4,500 acres.

At the close of the Brainerd sale, State Auditor Iverson and C. H. Warner, immigration agent, had sold 32,400 acres in four days. The sales were as follows.

Duluth, 5,600 acres.
Carlton, 12,500 acres.
Aitkin, 9,800 acres.
Brainerd, 4,500 acres.

Land has been purchased by settlers from many outside states, including Texas, New York, Nebraska, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Missouri. The average price was about $7 per acre, although some of the land brought nearly $20.

Mad Dog.

Winona.—All the country south of this city for a dozen miles and more is in a state of great excitement because of an epidemic of rabies. A brown bull terrior dog, supposed to have come from the government quarries at La Moille, passed through that section about two weeks ago, and, although it was not known to be mad at the time, it left a trail of trouble behind it. It bit several head of cattle and swine and they had to be killed, and one dog that was bitten was also killed.

All the other dogs in that section are being kept closely chained for fear that they have been infected, and the farmers are watching their stock very carefully for the first symptoms. So far as known no persons were bitten.

"No License" Means Lid.

St. Paul.—According to the new code a village voting "no license" votes against the sale of all intoxicating liquors in the village. Attorney General E. T. Young was asked whether in a village which had voted to go dry a so-called "beer house" could be allowed to do business.

Assistant Attorney General Stone holds that it cannot be allowed, for the code states expressly that when the proposition is submitted to the voters and they vote against licensing the sale of liquors, no intoxicating liquors shall be sold within the limits of the village. Otherwise beer could be sold under certain limitations, even where the town was dry.

Consumptive Cured.

Duluth.—Dwight, the ten-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. B. G. Segog of Duluth, had a pin taken out of his hip. The lad has been in rather poor health for two or three years and his case baffled the physicians. It was at last believed that he had consumption. A few months ago Dwight complained that his hip was lame and sore and lately inflammation developed in the hip. The inflammation was reduced and a surgeon opened the flesh. Mrs. Segog was dressing the wound according to instructions when she discovered the pin and removed it. It is expected that the boy's health will immediately improve.,

Whole Town Sold Out

Sparta.—Within a short space of time this entire village practically has changed hands. Not since the early settlement of the town has there been such a movement of Sparta real estate and even the people here cannot figure out what it means. Certain mysterious movement in the past few days have led many to believe that either the Steel corporation is buying up the property or that speculators are figuring on making a good thing out of the proposed moving of the village.

News Notes.

New London—The body of Archie Amy, who was drowned in Stauffers lake, six miles north of here, last fall, was recovered.

Minneapolis—The attorney general says that fraternal and beneficiary associations cannot sell endowment life insurance policies.

Winona—J. Greer, a wealthy farmer living four miles south of St. Charles, committed suicide by hanging. He is survived by a family.

Winona—All the country south of this city for a dozen miles and more is in a state of excitement because of an epidemic of rabies.

Mankato—As one result of the coal strike the Omaha road has discontined the local passenger train between Luverne and Worthington.

Brainerd—Over 4,500 acres of Crow Wing county land was sold by State Auditor Iverson here at auction. Prices ranged from $6 to $15 an acre.

Mankato—A fourteen-year-old St. Paul boy, who said he was bound by hypnotic influence to a tramp, was freed in this city and left for his home.

Ada—August Butkuss, who broke into a saloon and was caught robbing the cash drawer, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to fifteen months in the penitentiary.

Delano—Fire of unknown origin destroyed the Hanover roller mill and considerable adjacent property, causing a loss estimated at $25,000, of which $20,000 was on the mill.

Luverne—The effects of the coal strike will be felt in Luverne by the discontinuing by the Omaha company of the local passenger train between this city and Worthington.

Mankato—Burns, inflicted by boiling coffee may cause the death of Frankie Dauffenbeck, the 8-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Dauffenbeck, residing in Belgrade township.

Proctor—P. E. Woods, chief pumpman for the Duluth, Missabe & Northern railway, was accidentally killed by an ore train. He is survived by his wife and several small children.

St. Hilaire—An early morning fire completely destroyed the handsome farm house of Michael McAndress, a few miles east of here, entailing a loss of $4,500, with small insurance.

Brainerd—O. S. Campbell, a young man employed in a lath mill near Pequot, lost three fingers in one of the saws. He was brought to the St. Joseph's hospital here for treatment.

Grand Rapids—In a battle with a vicious house cat, Will Richardson, one of the prominent young men of this place, received such serious injuries that blood poisoning is feared.

St. Peter—Sunday was a dry Sunday in St. Peter. The town's new "lid" was on for the first time, and Mayor Rounseville had it screwed down so tight that the hinges fairly creaked.

Hastings—Andrew Frederickson of Ravenna was arrested by B. F. Selr, deputy game warden from Red Wing, for killing a teal duck out of season, and was fined $10 and costs, which he paid.

Little Falls—The body of Louis Waninger of Pierse, this county, was brought to the city from Casselton, N. D., where he met an accidental death as the result of the explosion of a shotgun.

Winona—Miss Ruby Harvey of Bagley, Wis., a first-year student in the normal school, had her arms frightfully burned and lies in a critical condition because she was careless in the use of benzine in cleaning gloves.

St. Cloud—St. Cloud Elks, members of Lodge 516, are planning some noteworthy features in the way of entertainment for those who attend the second annual convention of the Minnesota State association, which convenes in the granite city June 14 and 15.

Minneapolis—Caught beneath an avalanche of falling sand and gravel, George O'Neil and Nels Sanderson, two laborers employed on the Great Northern Railroad company's improvements at Clearwater Junction, were buried under tons of material, and either suffocated or crushed to death.

Little Falls—Iva H. Chambers, the six-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Chambers of this city, narrowly escaped drowning as the result of an accident on the Mississippi river yesterday afternoon and owes her life to the bravery and alertness of her father.

Brainerd—Harold, the five-year-old son of J. W. Curo of Pine River, is in a hospital here in a critical condition from a fracture of the skull as a result of being kicked by a horse. The boy was playing in the yard where the horse was, and went too close to its heels.

St. Paul—Judge Bunn in a decision rendered in the district court in the suits brought by the state against the Pioneer Press and the two afternoon papers upholds the constitutionality of the law prohibiting the publication of details of an execution. The cases grew out of the execution of William Williams on Feb. 13 for the murder of John Kellar at No. 1 Reid court, in April, 1905.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

A Republican County Convention for the County of Red Lake is hereby called to be held on Wednesday. June 6th, 1906, at one o'clock p.m. in the City of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota' for the purpose of electing nine delegates to the Republican State Convention, at Duluth Minnesota June 13th, 1906, and such other business as may properly come before the convention. Republican voters of the County, and all other voters, without regard to past political affiliations, who believe in the principals advocated by the Republican party and endorse its policies, are cordially invited to participate in the selection of delegates to this convention. Representation for this convention will be in accordance with the following resolution, adopted at a meeting of the Republican County Central Committee, held in the City of Red Lake Falls on the 17th day of April, 1906: Resolved that the representation of the several precincts shall be based upon the vote cast in the respective precincts at the general election in 1904 for the Republican candidate for Governor; that each precinct is entitled to one delegate for each fifty votes, or fraction thereof, so determined from the vote for the Republican candidate for Governor in 1804; that each precinct be allowed in addition there to, one delegate at large; that each of the following precincts' which were not organized at the general election of 1904, shall be entitled to one delegate at large: Townships of Silverton' Clover Leaf, Goodridge, Smiley, Kratka, Highlanding, Mayfield, Deer Park, and the village of Plummer.

All primary elections in the County for the election of delegates to this convention shall be held at the usual voting places in each precinct on Saturday, June 2nd, 1906, between the hours of 7 and 8 o'clock p.m.

That each precinct is entitled to the following representation in this convention: Black River, 2; Bray, 2; Emardville, 2; Equality 2; Garnes, 2; Gervais, 2; Lake Pleasant, 2; Lambert, 3; Louisville 2; North, 2; Norden, 2; Numedahl, 2; Polk Center, 2; Poplar River, 3; Red Lake Falls Township, 2; River Falls, 2; Rocksbury, 2; Sanders, 2; Terrebonne, 2; Wyandott, 2; St. Hilaire, 3; City of Red Lake Falls 1st ward, 2; 2nd ward, 2; 3rd ward, 2; City of Thief River Falls, 1st ward, 4; 2nd ward, 2; 3rd ward, 3; Silverton, 1; Clover Leaf, 1; Goodridge, 1; Smiley, 1; Kratka, 1; Highlanding, 1; May field, 1; Deer Park, 1; Village of Plummer, 1.

The Verdict.

Records of the ancient city of Gorgeana, founded in 1640, better known at the present time as York Harbor, Me., contain many quaint and unusual stories of the early life of the town.

At the entrance to York harbor a bold promontory known as Stage neck extends some distance into the sea, from which formerly in stormy weather a temporary light in the form of a lantern hoisted upon an upright pole was displayed as a warning to mariners.

One dark winter night a sloop was wrecked on these rocks. A survivor on being questioned about the catastrophe said:

"The vessel struck, turned over on her side, and the skipper and another barrel of whisky rolled overboard."

The local coroner was summoned, and this somewhat startling verdict was returned:

"We find that the deceased fell from the masthead and was killed. He rolled overboard and was drowned. He floated ashore and froze to death, and the rats eat him up alive!"—Harper's Weekly.

Parsee Burial Customs.

A Bombay correspondent, writing of the burial customs of the Parsees, says: "The approach of that transition we call death is a signal for the relatives to leave the presence of the dying one, the priest alone remaining to whisper Zend-Avesta precepts into his ear. He in turn passes out of the room and admits a dog, who is trained to gaze steadily into the face of the dying one. A dog is accounted the only living creature that can terrorize the evil spirits, as the sag-did, or 'dog stare,' is the last sight the Parsee has of earth. No human shadow must intervene, otherwise the guardian virtue of the dog's gaze is annulled."

To Scrape an Acquaintance.

"To scrape an acquaintance" was originated by the Emperor Hadrian. Once when visiting the public bath he found an old veteran scraping himself with a piece of broken crockery in lieu of an iron or copper scraper. Hadrian gave him a sum of money to provide the necessary materials for a bath and on his next visit to the institution found it full of veterans scraping themselves with potsherds. "Scrape away, gentlemen, but you shall not scrape an acquaintance with me," was Hadrian's comment as he went out.

The Poet's Inconsistency.

"You speak of the brooks," said the critic as he looked over his friend's poem, "as the most joyous things in nature."

"So they are," said the poet.

"But you are inconsistent."

"Why?"

"Because later on you say they are ever murmuring."

"I was in such a state of collapse when I reached Liverpool that I cabled back to learn whether I had thrown up my job."

Virginia—I think I am somewhat like you in one respect, Mr. Blowhard.

Blowhard—Indeed! In what respect?

Virginia—I enjoy hearing you talk.

Monster Beds.

Though the beds of the royal personages of England were elaborately carved and hung with rich curtains even so late as the Tudor period, it is recorded that King Henry VIII.'s bed contained only straw beneath all its finery. A curious order exists as to precautions to be taken against the possibility of intended mischief to the royal person in the making of the bed, for the usher was to search the straw through with a dagger, "that there be none untruth therein, and to tumble over on the down bed for the better search thereof." The bed of Henry VIII, was nearly eleven feet square, and of even more generous dimensions is the great bed to which Shakespeare refers in a well known passage in "Twelfth Night," which was twelve feet square. This "great bed of Ware" has been a marvel for centuries.

Nemesis.

Nemesis is lame, but she is of colossal stature, and sometimes, while her sword is not yet unsheathed, she stretches out her huge left arm and grasps her victim. The mighty hand is invisible, but the victim totters under the dire clutch.—George Eliot.

Thrust Upon Him.

Laugh and Live Long.

It has been aptly said that there is not the remotest corner of the inlet of the minute blood vessels of the human body that does not feel some wavelet from the convulsions occasioned by good hearty laughter. The life principle of the central man is shaken to its innermost depths, sending new tides of life and strength to the surface, thus materially tending to insure good health to the persons who indulge therein. The blood moves more rapidly and conveys a different impression to all the organs of the body as it visits them on that particular mystic journey [illegible] laughing from that [illegible] distinct stimulus to the vital forces.

There will be 53 Sundays in this year, an accurance will not happen again for 110 years. This extra Sunday can be untilzed in attending church, calling on your best girl, reading scripture, playing with the children, breaking a two year old colt, or some other way. One hundred and ten years from this date will probably be paying the penalty on enjoying the pleasures of the methods in which you choose to spend the extra Sunday.—Ex.

THAT BRIDGE.

As there are all kinds of rumers circulating through the country concerning The Clear Water Bridge and its constructors, we wish to state a few facts in regards to same, in order to defend ourselves against the false reports circulated by the crazy talker of Rhoda and other fools. The total amount of sub scriptions for the Bridge in Sec. 33, Town 152, R. 40, is a little less than $250. while our list shows that $130 of the above amount was to be cash, and the balance to be labor. The County allows $100. for said Bridge, which makes it all told $350. now the total cost of the Bridge calls for $433.75. The raw meterial cost us on the ground $198.25 and the labor in constructing the Bridge calls for $235.50 allowing $1.50 per day for each man and $3.00 per day for man and team Now please figure this up and see whether we are working for the benefit of the country or if we are grafters

A certain talker of Rhoda Minn. subscribed $5.00 for the Bridge, but before paying the small sum he wanted to see all the bills and a correct account of all business done in connection with said Bridge. Now we are pleased to inform our friend the talker that he will find all these accounts printed on the Bridge when he catches it in his fish net down at Mr. Greens.

Why the Devil Has Cloven Hoofs.

Legends of the devil are quite common in Ireland, but the one which is most interesting and least known perhaps is that which tells why the prince of the infernal regions has split hoofs, like those of a cow beast. Moore alludes to the legend in his story of St. Kevin and Kathleen at Glendalough. In that story Moore makes St. Kevin throw his former ladylove over the cliff in order to be rid of her importunities, but the peasants of the Glendalough district give the story a more poetical touch. They insist that it was not Kathleen that was thrown over the cliff, but that it was Satan, who had assumed the form of the lady in order to tempt the saint. The moment the prince of evil toppled over the edge of the yawning abyss he spread his batlike wings and sailed away in safety, much to the surprise of the holy saint. Later on the devil again attempted to lay a snare for St. Kevin, but the saint managed to get the arch fiend on holy ground, where, of course, he was helpless. While the devil was in this helpless condition Kevin sawed off his legs and attached cows' hoofs to the stumps. Since that day Satan has been cloven footed and will be until the end of time.

Echoes and Architects.

"It is possible to make echoes," said an architect. "It is, indeed, easier to make than to destroy them. In the past men built their great temples and cathedrals with no thought of acoustics; hence when the preacher preached echoes rolled freely amid the groinings of the roof, down the rows of sculptured columns and round and round the nave. With wires strung here and with tapestries spread there, many of the echoes of the old world buildings have been obliterated. There are echo experts—builders acquainted with the science of acoustics whose specialty is echoes' destruction. Sometimes their tasks are hard. Today an architect takes thought of the echo. His building is constructed so as to exclude this intruder. And, knowing how to exclude it, he knows how to welcome it also. I have frequently in landscape work put up summer houses and arranged rocks so as to create an echo there."—Exchange.

Flogging.

Flogging, in public and otherwise, is not of mediaeval origin. In the middle ages ridicule and not physical suffering was the means employed for the correction of wrongdoing; hence the pillory, the stocks and the thewe—a chair suspended high over the heads of the crowd, in which women, generally scolds, were brought to a sweet reasonableness—but the whipping post belongs to the Tudor age. The Elizabethan servant question was met by flogging girls for idleness on Sunday morning. But it was in the Hanoverian period that flogging was carried to excess. As late as 1804 six women were publicly flogged in Gloucester, England, because they had been found begging.

European Jiu Jitsu.

A French teacher of boxing points out that an art of self defense approximately equivalent to jiu jitsu was known in Europe in the seventeenth century. Its principles are expounded in a work by one Nicolas Peters, published at Amsterdam in 1674 and bearing the lengthy explanatory title: "The art of wrestling and how one can protect oneself in all kinds of quarrels that may occur; how one can with agility and rapidity repel all unfair attacks and meet one's adversary with science." The work is illustrated. The author apparently anticipated many of the characteristic grips of the Japanese exponents of today.

An Island City.

Greater New York consists of forty-five islands. It might be called the Island City. Read the names of some of the larger: Manhattan Island, Long Island, Staten Island, Hart's Island, City Island, Riker's Island, North Brother Island, South Island, Blackwell's Island, Randall's Island, Ward's Island, Berrian's Island, Governors Island, Barren Island and Coney Island. Many small ones in Jamaica bay have large names. One inland island, Marble Hill, near Kingsbridge, has been made by the government channel cut through on the Harlem river improvements.

Usually Effective.

"Sometimes," said the merchant, "I feel like the poet who wanted a lodge in some vast wilderness. I yearn for solitude and silence."

"Well," replied his friend sympathetically, "it's an expensive taste to gratify, but you might start in by taking your advertisement out of the newspapers."—Washington Star.

A Trifle Better.

Professor—Pray excuse me for keeping you waiting for a few minutes, gentlemen. Unfortunately I have come without the manuscript of my lecture, but I have sent my little boy for it. Little Boy (entering the hall)—Mother says she can't find the manuscript of your lecture, but I've brought the book you copied it from.

Awful Thought!

Molly—Papa, I wish you'd close the door of your room when gentlemen are calling on me. Your snores are something fearful. Dad—Well, it won't hurt 'em. Molly—Perhaps not, but they might think it's hereditary.

The Benefit.

She—So you really imagine that smoking benefits you. He—I know it does. My mother-in-law leaves the room the minute I light my pipe.

It Looks That Way.

Franklin's Sawdust Pudding.

Franklin believed in fair competition, in freedom for others as well as himself and cared more for his personal independence in the conduct of his business than for the business itself. The story of the sawdust pudding should be known in every newspaper office in the country. When he first started the Gazette he made some free comments on certain public officials, and some of the influential patrons of the paper resented it and tried to stop it. He invited them to dinner. When they came they found nothing on the table but a pudding made of coarse meal and a jug of water. They sat down. Franklin filled their plates and then his own and proceeded to eat heartily, but his guests could not swallow the stuff. After a few moments Franklin rose and, looking at them, said quietly: "My friends, any man who can subsist on sawdust pudding, as I can, needs no man's patronage."—American Illustrated Magazine.

A Scheme and a Luncheon.

One of Balzac's wild schemes was a plan to combine Paris theaters. One morning in September, 1839—an early day to talk of monopoly—ten literary friends of the great novelist met by invitation at his house. Before luncheon Balzac told them of his scheme. His idea was to form a trust to buy up all the theaters as a sequel to a smaller preliminary trust for the supply of plays to every theater in Paris. The ten guests were to supply them. He estimated the profits of the first year at £120,000, and each year would, he thought, bring in more money. He expounded his scheme at length for over an hour, and finally one of the guests suggested that he might go on at table. The novelist started. "I forgot all about ordering anything to eat!" he cried, and late in the afternoon the members of the shadowy trust made a shadowy meal of bread and cheese and sour wine in a small country restaurant.

Liquid Metal Polish.

Take eight ounces of Spanish whiting, which must be perfectly free from grit, and put in one quart of gasoline. Shake up the whiting and gasoline thoroughly. You will notice the whiting settles immediately, leaving the liquid as clear as water. To remedy this and, further, to make it a better polishing agent, add to each quart of the mixture thirty-two drops of oleic acid—no more, no less. Shake again, and the whiting will not settle. Apply to gold, silver, nickel, brass, glass or any kind of metallic surface with a piece of cotton flannel, rubbing well. Polish with a piece of same cloth.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

Waterproofing Dress Goods.

One of the most important processes used for waterproofing dress materials is on the lines of the old alumina process. In this case the factor used is rosin dissolved in a large bulk of petroleum spirit. The fabrics to be proofed are passed through a bath of this solution and dried to drive off the solvent. Following this, the goods are treated by pressing with hot polished metal rollers. This last process melts the small quantity of rosin which is deposited on the cloth and leaves each single fiber with an exceedingly thin film of rosin on it.

A Desperate Case.

Walk O. Nights—Doctor, what is a simple remedy for sleeplessness? Doctor—Let the person count till he falls asleep. Walk O. Nights—He can't count. It's the baby.

The honor we receive of those who fear and stand in awe of us is no true honor.—Montaigne.

Big, Big Words.

"Those who are accustomed to ridicule present day scientists because of their fondness for big words," said the etymologist, "will find them much more moderate in the concoction of words than the old timers.

"For instance, I have just come across the account of a scientific treatise published in the seventeenth century that contains words even much more cumbersome than its title, which, by the way, is 'Panzoologicomineralogia,' a good mouthful surely, yet the meaning is easily ascertained when the word is reduced to its component parts.

"The list of long titles that were then favorites would cause the modern book clerk a spasm, yet the list could be gone into indefinitely. A play in blank verse published in the latter part of the seventeenth century had as its alluring title 'Chrononhotonthologos,' and this was the opening sentence:

"'Aldeborontiphoscophornio, where left you Chrononhotonthologos?'

"If the modern mouthing actor can hardly get simple Anglo-Saxon words over the footlights, how could he get along with that morsel?"—New York Herald

DEFECTIVE PAGE

ATTACKED THE HEART

Awful Neuralgia Case Cured to Stay Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Neuralgia in any form is painful but when it attacks the heart it is frequently fatal. Complicated with indigestion of a form that affected the vital organ it threatened serious consequences in an instance just reported. The case is that of Mr. F. L. Graves, of Pleasanthill, La., who tells of his trouble and cure as follows:

"I traveled considerably, was exposed to all kinds of weather and was irregular in my sleeping and eating. I suppose this was the cause of my sickness, at any rate, in May, 1905, I had got so bad that I was compelled to quit work and take to my bed. I had a good doctor and took his medicine faithfully but grew worse. I gave up hope of getting better and my neighbors thought I was surely going to die.

"I had smothering spells that it is awful to recall. My heart fluttered and then seemed to cease beating. I could not lie on my left side at all. My hands and feet swelled and so did my face. After reading about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in a newspaper I decided to try them and they suited my case exactly. Before long I could see an improvement and after taking a few boxes I was entirely cured. I am glad to make this statement and wish it could cause every sufferer to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do not simply deaden pain; they cure the trouble which causes the pain. They are guaranteed to contain no narcotic, stimulant or opiate. Those who take them run no danger of forming any drug habit. They act directly on the blood and it is only through the blood that any medicine can reach the nerves.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N.Y.

ODD BITS AND BREVITIES.

President Roosevelt does not like automobiles. He has been importuned many times to buy one or accept one as a gift, but he refuses even to ride in them. He sticks to horses.

MacMonnies has been appointed sculptor of the proposed $50,000 bronze statue of Joseph Jefferson as Rip Van Winkle, which is to be mounted on a granite pedestal in Central park, New York.

Maj. Charles Gantz, a resident of this country, claims the unique distinction of being the smallest man in the world. He is 39 years of age, weighs only 30 pounds and is 18 inches in height.

Several English song birds, including the lark, nightingale, blackbird and thrush, are thriving in an outdoor flying cage in the New York zoo, and make themselves quite at home with American birds.

In a sped contest on typewriters in Chicago, Miss Elizabeth Baker made the record for the smallest number of mistakes in her copy. In half an hour she wrote 4,085 words, making mistakes in only 52 of them.

FACTS ABOUT STAMPS.

A specialist who collected the stamps of France and her colonies recently sold his collection for $11,000.

It takes a stamp collector to tell where are Ancash, Antofagasta, Apurimac, Chiapa, Diego Suarez, Bamra, Yca, Wadwhan, Goliad, Jhino, Ujong, Faridkot, Nabba and Obock.

It requires more than 40 large albums to house the collection of United States stamps owned by the earl of Crawford. This collection of United States stamps is thought to be the most complete in existence.

The credit of originating adhesive stamps is generally given to James Chalmers, of Dundee, Scotland. He first advocated them in 1837, and in accordance with a legislative enactment of December 21, 1839, they were issued for public use in England May 6, 1840.

A BUSY WOMAN

Can Do the Work of 3 or 4 If Well Fed.

An energetic young woman living just outside of New York, writes:

"I am at present doing all the housework of a dairy farm, caring for 2 children, a vegetable and flower garden, a large number of fowls, besides managing an extensive exchange business through the mails and pursuing my regular avocation as a writer for several newspapers and magazines (designing fancy work for the latter) and all the energy and ability to do this I owe to Grape-Nuts food.

"It was not always so, and a year ago when the shock of my nursing baby's death utterly prostrated me and deranged my stomach and nerves so that I could not assimilate as much as a mouthful of solid food, and was in even worse condition mentally, he would have been a rash prophet who would have predicted that it ever would do so.

"Prior to this great grief I had suffered for years with impaired digestion, insomnia, agonizing cramps in the stomach, pain in the side, constipation, and other bowel derangements, all these were familiar to my daily life. Medicines gave me no relief—nothing did, until a few months ago, at a friend's suggestion, I began to use Grape-Nuts food, and subsequently gave up coffee entirely and adopted Postum Food Coffee at all my meals.

"To-day I am free from all the troubles I have enumerated. My digestion is simply perfect, I assimilate my food without the least distress, enjoy sweet, restful sleep, and have a buoyant feeling of pleasure in my varied duties. In fact, I am a new woman, entirely made over, and I repeat, I owe it all to Grape-Nuts and Postum Coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Haunted Hall

A ROUMANIAN TALE

By HELENE VACARESCO
Lady-in-Waiting at the Roumanian Court

(Copyright, 1906, by Joseph B. Bowles)

"Sultana, you and your brother will have to sleep here and guard the corn," said the young girl's mother.

It was after sunset, and the peasants had all returned to their homes in the neighboring village. The evening was beautiful, and the eastern sky, lit up by delicate clouds shading from the palest pink to violet, made an exquisite picture.

"Dear mother, sleep here," replied Sultana, in an awed whisper, "we know the corn must be guarded, and that the Tziganes (Bohemians) are rapacious and daring, but everyone in the village says that yonder place is haunted. My brothers need have no fear, for the spirits of the dead only show themselves to young girls when, when—"

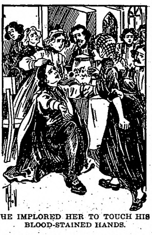
"When they are pretty," quickly put in her mother. "Have you ever been curious enough to look at yourself in the fountain, or the well? If so, you may have seen frowning at you a very brown small face. You are always frowning, Sultana, and no spirits will show themselves to you. You are not pretty enough."

"Yet Constantin told me—"

"Constantin is in love with you, and covets the house and cattle; he has every reason to declare you are pretty," muttered the old woman between her teeth.

"Well, good night, child, I have no time to spare. You must be tired, so lie down on the straw and rest. In half an hour the moon will rise and keep you company." With these words Sultana's mother lifted a bundle of straw which had fallen from the last wagon, pushed it towards the girl and then took the path that led to the village.

As her footsteps died away, Sultana looked round for her brothers, and, not seeing them, she walked a little way, finally finding them fast asleep near a hedge. Something like pity for her toiling race moved her heart; but peasant girls rarely stop to analyze their feelings and prefer dreams to the reality of thought.



HE IMPLORED HER TO TOUCH HIS BLOOD-STAINED HANDS.

The vast plain stretched around her like a silver sea in the twilight and the gleaming village lights on the hill seemed to be the only sentinels to whose care this vast stretch of land was confided. The ruins of an old castle rose at the foot of the hill, and towards this place Sultana wound her way, wondering to herself if it were really haunted, and if it were really possible that the legends she had so often heard were true.

"How unlikely," she muttered to herself, as she pushed back the yellow muslin handkerchief on her head, and let the night air fan her curly black hair, and caress her small, delicate face. As she stood there, gazing at what had perhaps in ages past been a house of revelry and grandeur, the moon rose. Sultana remembered a story she had heard in her childhood, that the moon burned to ashes all the young girls she met on the plain when she first rose. Thinking of this, she slowly returned to her bed of straw, laid herself down and was soon asleep.

All at once she awoke bewildered and troubled, and saw standing a few paces from her the shadowy form of a woman, who seemed to be beckoning her towards the ruins. At the same moment she became aware that soft, invisible music was playing around her.

She rose quickly and, running to the ruins, found to her great surprise a door she had never noticed before. Opening it, she discovered some steps which led into what had been in ages past an immense banqueting hall. At a long table gorgeously decorated with silver candelabra and laden with exquisite fruit and flowers sat about a hundred lords and ladies. That this was a bridal party Sultana understood at once. It also struck her that she was invisible to all the company, with the exception of a handsome youth, who wore a white satin costume and a long, dark green velvet cloak.

Never in her wildest imagination had Sultana seen a face so distinguished and handsome as this youth's who seemed to watch her with imploring eyes. A beautiful woman sat opposite him. Her rich dress was also white and glistening with diamonds. Thrown over the back of her chair was a green mantle, similar to that worn by the youth. The music had stopped on her entering the hall and a deep silence ensued. Sultana's eyes followed the young man's movements, and with a pang of disappointment and jealousy she discovered that he was the bridegroom and the lady opposite his bride. Yet he took no notice of her and his gaze was fixed on Sultana with a look full of love and reverence. Sultana trembled with expectation and excitement. Would he not speak to her or bid the servants question her as to her intrusion and desires?

But he said nothing, and Sultana was beginning to feel weary of the unchanging spectacle and the silence of the dazzling company, when suddenly the strains of music were again heard, wild, weird music, which seemed as if it would rend the violins. At the same moment a strong smell of roses pervaded the room and the guests all rose with animated and uneasy gestures, pushing their chairs aside. The bridegroom was the first to rise. He lifted his glass and seemed about to drink, when suddenly he threw it violently to the ground, and, seizing a knife, flung it into the bosom of his bride. The girl fell back with a scream, and horror-stricken Sultana watched her life blood oozing down her white satin gown. In haste the youth rushed across the table, smeared his hands in the warm blood and to Sultana's terror approached her with a humble and beseeching air, showing her by his gestures that he was begging of her to touch his blood-stained hands with hers. Sultana, almost beside herself with fright, tried to rush out of the hall, but all the assembly gathered round her, and, falling on their knees, showed by signs that they were imploring her to fulfill the young man's request.

When Sultana returned to her mother's house at dawn the old woman stood aghast at her scared face. "The full moon has done you some harm after all. How your hands burn. You must come to bed at once." For some days Sultana remained unconscious; then delirium seized her. She raved continually about the unknown youth and the scene which had taken place in the haunted castle.

"She has gone mad," said the neighbors to each other, as one by one they came to inquire and saw the poor girl throwing her arms over her head or hiding her face in her hands and crying bitterly.

Yet Sultana recovered. She never alluded to what was uppermost in her thoughts. Soon after she had regained her usual health she resolved to question an old witch, who was supposed to be well versed in magic of all kinds. Having entered her miserable little hut, which was filled with all kinds of curious looking objects, she sat down on a low stool before the fire and said: "I am told you possess powers unusual to most people. I have, therefore, come to ask you to tell me all you know about the haunted castle lying at the foot of our village. If you do not know its history, can you not by your magic spells find it out?"

The old witch answered: "I know its history and will tell it you. Three hundred years ago the son of a mighty hoyard (Roumanian chief) who inhabited the castle fell in love with a beautiful peasant girl. His parents, of course, opposed the marriage and betrothed the unhappy youth to the daughter of another hoyard, who was immensely wealthy and powerful. The poor peasant girl poisoned herself before the marriage took place. On the very eve of the ceremony the youth entreated his fiancee to release him from his engagement. She was a bad and heartless woman, who laughed in his face, and taunted him, telling him that she was quite content to possess his riches without possessing his heart. And then at a large dinner given in honor of the bride—"

"Stop! I know the rest; he stabbed her."

"I see you have heard the tale before," said the witch. "Do you also know that the wretched souls of these people who died so long ago return by night and haunt the castle hall, where they are bound to go through the terrible scene continually until some living girl, who resembles the girl the youth loved, will consent to touch the young man's blood-stained hands? This is the only means of lifting his heavy curse and frightful punishment. It is likely to last forever, as he will never find a human being capable of such a sacrifice, as the instant she touches his blood-stained hands she must die."

A week after this conversation had taken place, Sultana was found dead in the hall of the ruined castle and carried tenderly by her people to her home. All who saw her were struck by the peaceful and happy look on her face, and a few days later, at her funeral, the astonished peasants noticed the presence of a tall and extremely handsome youth, wrapped in a long black cloak, who spoke to no one, but lingered by the grave after all the others had left.

The priest, whose cottage overlooked the cemetery, related that he saw the mysterious youth lie down on the freshly filled grave and slowly sink into the earth that covered Sultana.

Underground River Connects Lakes.

News of the discovery of a big underground river at Nelles Corners, Haldimand county, Ont., has been received. While men were drilling for natural gas they struck the river 500 feet down in the ground. The discovery was made when the drill suddenly dropped a distance of 30 feet. When drawn out it was wet. The rush of water could be heard when the men put their ears to the hole. Water was pumped out, and with it came some fish. Residents of the district believe it is a great channel connecting Lake Erie with Ontario. Its discovery is beleved to explain why all the wells around there went dry. No one could say which way the river is running. Considerable excitement prevails as the result of the discovery.

GAVE THE RIGHT ANSWER.

How the Late John Hay Displayed His Aptitude for the Law.

When the late Secretary Hay applied for admission to the bar at Illinois he was summoned to appear before a committee of prominent Chicago lawyers to be examined as to his qualifications, relates the American Spectator.

He went to the place appointed and found the committee assembled; but for a long time they took no notice of the young candidate, but continued to talk vigorously together on various subjects. At last one of the lawyers, turning to him, said:

"Mr. Hay, what would you do if a client should come to you with such a case as this?" and he proceeded to describe very elaborately a complicated legal case.

"I should ask for a retaining fee of $50," promptly replied Mr. Hay, "and tell him to call to-morrow."

"Mr. Hay, you are admitted," said the gentleman, and with a hearty laugh from all present the proceedings closed.

Merely a Suggestion.

Why not assemble all the euthanasia cranks who wish to kill off the old and "incurable" people in one inclosure and all the cranks who produce schemes for the abolition of death in another inclosure, organize them into football teams and then turn them loose and let them proceed to exterminate one another in true football style?—Chicago Chronicle.

MIDDLE LIFE

A Time When Women Are Susceptible to Many Dread Diseases—Intelligent Women Prepare for it. Two Relate their Experiences.

Mrs. A. E. G. Hyland

The "change of life" is the most critical period of a woman's existence, and the anxiety felt by women as it draws near is not without reason.

Every woman who neglects the care of her health at this time invites disease and pain.

When her system is in a deranged condition, or she is predisposed to apoplexy, or congestion of any organ, the tendency is at this period likely to become active—and with a host of nervous irritations make life a burden. At this time, also, cancers and tumors are more liable to form and begin their destructive work.

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness, inquietude, and dizziness, are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period in life when woman's great change may be expected.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was prepared to meet the needs of woman's system at this trying period of her life. It invigorates and strengthens the female organism and builds up the weakened nervous system.

For special advice regarding this important period women are invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., and it will be furnished absolutely free of charge. The present Mrs. Pinkham is the daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, her assistant before her decease, and for twenty-five years since her advice has been freely given to sick women.

Read what Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound did for Mrs. Hyland and Mrs. Hinkle:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I had been suffering with displacement of the organs for years and was passing through the change of life. My abdomen was badly swollen; my stomach was sore; I had dizzy spells, sick headaches, and was very nervous.

"I wrote you for advice and commenced treatment with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as you directed, and I am happy to say that all those distressing symptoms left me and I have passed safely through the change of life, a well woman. I am recommending your medicine to all my friends."—Mrs. Annie E. G. Hyland, Chestertown, Md.

Another Woman's Case.

"During change of life words cannot express what I suffered. My physician said I had a cancerous condition of the female organs. One day I read some of the testimonials of women who had been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I decided to try it and to write you for advice. Your medicine made me a well woman, and all my bad symptoms soon disappeared.

"I advise every woman at this period of life to take your medicine and write you for advice."—Mrs. Lizzie Hinkle, Salem, Ind.

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Hyland and Mrs. Hinkle it will do for other women at this time of life.

It has conquered pain, restored health, and prolonged life in cases that utterly baffled physicians.

THE 'FRISCO DISASTER.

An era of hope and good feeling has taken possession of San Francisco. Order has been brought out of chaos almost like magic, and naught but optimism prevails. Old animosities have been buried in the ashes of the city, and each citizen is working with might and main for the upbuilding of a greater San Francisco.

Total out of town subscriptions, $4,617,088.43; local subscriptions, $213,950; total, $4,831,038.43; subscriptions promised, but not signed, $590,400; grand total, $5,421,438.43.

The first street car was run across the city, Mayor Schmitz acting as motorman, amid cheers of thousands.

A permit was issued for the erection of a 12-story building on the site occupied by a much inferior structure.

Herbert E. Law, representative of San Francisco business men, is on his way to Washington to ask the government for a loan of $100,000,000 for rebuilding the city.

That conditions in San Francisco are most favorable and that the work of relief has fallen into a well-ordered routine was the gist of reports laid before a conference between Gov. Pardee, Gen. Greely, Mayor Schmitz, Dr. Devine, of the Red Cross, and members of the citizens' committee of 50, who are advising the mayor.

The war department decided to accede to the request made by Gen. Greely at San Francisco and will send the additional 2,500 troops that he has asked for.

The property losses in San Francisco are placed by conservative fire underwriters at $200,000,000, the largest in the country's history.

San Francisco was shaken by a new earthquake, which toppled over walls of ruins in the burned district and did some damage to frail houses, causing much terror and one more death.

There is a wide discrepancy in the figures reckoning the number of dead at San Francisco. Coroner Walsh estimates the total casualties at 1,000. But Gen. A. W. Greeley, now in charge of the federal troops, has officially stated to the war department at Washington that the total dead is 277.

San Francisco of past days, the beautiful San Francisco which has gone, is to be utterly eclipsed by the San Francisco of the future—a San Francisco which is being planned to make the most exquisite city in the world.

In accordance with a recommendation contained in a message from President Roosevelt congress provided another $1,500,000 for the relief of the San Francisco earthquake victims.

Maj. H. C. Tilden, a member of Gov. Pardee's staff and one of the most prominent members of the general relief committee, was almost instantly killed in his automobile by members of the citizens' patrol.

CONGRESSIONAL NEWS.

Postmaster General Cortelyou submitted to the post office committee of the senate and house at Washington a bill providing for issuing postal notes at all money order and many smaller offices from denominations ranging from one cent to $2.50.

Representative Boutell of Chicago, in a speech in the house at Washington, defended the Elgin Watch company against charges made by Representative Rainey recently, giving high praise to the management.

Mr. Hepburn, of Iowa, in a stand-pat tariff speech in the house, challenged proof of the statement that American rails are sold cheaper abroad than at home.

The senate committee on post offices and postroads voted to report favorably the nomination of Benjamin F. Barnes, assistant secretary to President Roosevelt, to be postmaster of Washington.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mayor Tom L. Johnson of Cleveland has invented a motor that in recent tests developed a theoretical speed of 400 miles an hour. The mayor hopes with his invention to give the world a system of rapid transit that will revolutionize all means of travel.

Prof. Matteucci succeeded in reaching the crater of Vesuvius. The diameter of the crater, which before the eruption was 100 feet, is now 5,000 feet.

DISASTER ERASES CLASS DISTINCTION

EARTHQUAKE AT SAN FRANCISCO PLACES RICH AND POOR ON SAME LEVEL.

SIDELIGHTS ON THE GREAT CATASTROPHE

Millionaire and Pauper Now Friends—Business Being Conducted Amid the Ruins—Heir to Wealth Born on Sidewalk.

San Francisco, Cal.—This town is "on the level" in every sense of the word, writes Richard Barry. You can stand on Tar flat and see Telegraph hill with no obstruction but a few skyscraper skeletons. South of Van Ness avenue it is not even a junk heap. No more ghouls are shot because there is nothing to steal, and they will have to pay men to carry off the smashed bricks. Russian, Telegraph and Nob hills, which formerly made such a magnificent metropolitan saddle against the Golden Gate, look as they do in the prints of '49, when scrubby bushes rambled across their barren faces. They have been scraped of foul and fair by a mighty muck rake. The homes of threefourths of the people are annihilated, and as one walks through the desolation he slowly realizes that the world can never know what has happened; that 100 Pompeiis would be swallowed in these ruins and that California in tragedy, as in all else, has shaken her jaunty fist in the face of history and written "finis" to the volume.

Social Distinctions Leveled.

Yet these smashed buildings and desolate streets do not present the significant leveling. The material loss is great, but it does not stagger the imagination. A few hundred millions will mend the hurt and there are many people here to-day who think the shake-up is worth the leveling. Society is on the ground, face to face. Every artificial barrier is swept away. The social distinctions built up in 50 years have been obliterated with the same swiftness and finality shown by the flames toward the property. The loss of life is small, the loss of social position colossal. Down to the elements, now nothing counts but human loss. Money has momentarily lost its purchasing power. Servants, luxury, habits, prestige—yes, amity, feuds, hatred, jealousy and contempt have disappeared. Humanity is in the flat and every one is on the level.

Here are a few random incidents picked from the edge of the cataclysm:

Fillmore street, a third-rate metropolitan artery, has become for the moment the business center of the town. Here, in dinky bakeries, cheap candy stores, tawdry photograph galleries and insignificant lodging houses, are found all that is left of the greatest business institutions on the Pacific coast. A sawmill that formerly employed 4,000 men has its office in a hall bedroom that used to rent for one dollar a week. A bakery that employed 300 carts before the fire is operating out of a hand laundry that was run by three women. The largest department store in the west is being resurrected from a soda water stand that has been roughly partitioned, the front 14 by 16 feet space being used for an office. In a rear room of similar extent the exclusive heads go for frijeles and coffee warmed over an alcohol lamp.

Odd Quarters for City Officials.

You can see the chief of police in San Francisco as easily as you could see the sheriff of the most backwoods county in Arizona. He sits in the window of a corner grocery and as you pass on the sidewalk you glance at his bright face and hear his hearty laugh. The mayor issues his orders from the lodge room of a secret society. The superior court is being held in a Jewish synagogue, while the city and county records are buried in a tomb in the Masonic cemetery.

The newspapers that once occupied the principal skyscrapers in the city are being operated from four little rooms in the same block, no one of which has more than a 30-foot front or a 50-foot depth. On one side of each room you can see the sign "Subscription Department," on the other "Advertising Department," while on each rear wall hangs a rough sign, "Editorial Department."

One Newspaper Office a Bedroom.

One of the most fortunate papers, after much maneuvering, has managed to commandeer a second-floor bedroom, the nature of whose previous occupants is attested by the notice still hanging from the chandelier, which reads, "Don't Blow Out the Gas." In this tiny room, around two small tables, is congregated the journalistic talent that formerly conducted a world-famous organ from a suite of 15 rooms in one of the most magnificent buildings in the west.

If further proof were needed of the leveling character of conditions it might have been seen yesterday afternoon, when "Mike" De Young, of the Chronicle, millionaire and political leader, stood in front of one of these little offices. Down the street in an automobile belonging to ex-Mayor James D. Phelan came Abe Reuf, the triumphant Republican boss. When he saw De Young he waved his hat and called out a hearty greeting, to which De Young responded with a gay salute. For one not intimate with San Francisco to fully realize what this means he must be told that Reuf, Phelan and De Young are the respective leaders of the most bitter and antagonistic political factions in the west.

If you still doubt that the millenium is upon us go down the street two blocks to where the relief committee is working 24 hours a day from the showroom of a vegetable grocer and you will find Gavin McNabb and Abe Reuf with chairs and arms touching, laughing at the same grim earthquake jokes and putting the two craftiest heads in San Francisco together for the immediate relief of the afflicted. A week ago as the bosses respectively of the Republican and Democratic ranks, America could have afforded no more striking instance of deadly rivalry than would have been adduced by mention of these two names.

Resurrecting a Dry Goods Store.

From another cigar stand white-haired, esthetic Raphael Weil is resurrecting the most fashionable dry goods store in the city. He is old, wealthy and practically retired. He could easily turn his back on San Francisco and live the rest of his days, the one other place of his delight; but says he: "I shall stay here and see it all up again just as it was—with perhaps one difference, it will be about twice as good."

Up and down all the streets one can see curbstone fires, where the people are cooking their meals in obedience to the municipal order to light no fires in the houses. They being without large ranges, small kitchen stoves, improvised sheet iron ovens and the old brick Dutch ovens are used and from which are turned out some wonderful concoctions.

Most of the servants have either run away or been sent away and the people [illegible] own meals out of doors are among the best in the city. Cooking their dinners in the streets may be seen girls who have been educated at Stanford, Berkeley, Vassar and Bryn Mawr.

Spreckels Heir Born on Sidewalk.

But of all the astounding leveling feats accomplished by the fire and earthquake the most remarkable occurred in front of the Pacific avenue home of Rudolf Spreckels, son of the president of the sugar trust. There on the sidewalk, behind some screens, Mrs. Spreckels was safely delivered of a handsome and healthy son. It is a free state, everyone beginning over again, rich and poor alike, just as the front rank broke from the line the day Oklahoma territory was opened to settlement.

Not Fair Shake; Start Again.

Young men who can swing a small capital to-day will be millionaires in a few years. Millionaires who to-day are walking the streets mourning over their ill-luck will never again be flush. San Francisco, queen city of chance, born of the gambling fever, bred of the gambling energy, dreamed out of a gambler's visions of wealth and glory, with a fierce and terrible grandeur, has smitten all who loved her and said to the half million who had sworn by her: "It's not a fair shake; start again."

Rescue Insane People.

Many stories of heroism lie buried in the ruins, but some tales that make the heart tingle are slowly filtering through official sources. This is the story of the noble work performed by Mrs. Kane, matron of the Detention hospital, and Policeman John McLean, who was detailed there the night of the great earthquake. The insane patients at the ruined city hall were kept in locked cells, from which only the keys of the stewards could free them. At the hour of dawn on that fatal Wednesday morning, the structure in which the courts were housed was the first to fall. The weight tense nervous energency and the officer the detention hospital, which was on the ground floor. Steward Manville was so badly injured by the falling ruins that he died two days later. Mrs. Kane and Policeman McLean, however, managed to rush outside to momentary safety. Both of them are well advanced in years, but the nurse is a woman of intense nervous energy and the officer is a man of giant frame. As soon as they reached the open court they were greeted by the terrified shrieks of the insane that pierced through the smoking ruins around. They refused to leave their helpless charges, and both went back into the chaotic debris.

New Buildings Are Planned.

The work of rebuilding San Francisco will proceed rapidly. Mrs. Herman Oelrichs of New York has agreed to repair the Rialto building and to build again on the site of the Crossley. She and her sister, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., have also stated that they will put up solid office structures on their Montgomery street site.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Golden Jubilee.

Minneapolis.—Minnesota in all probability will celebrate its golden jubilee in 1908 with an exposition which in extent and general interest will more than eclipse that of the Lewis and Clark exposition. The commission, which held a joint meeting with the state fair managers at the Merchants hotel, St. Paul, practically admitted that it will recommend to the next legislature an exposition to be held in connection with the regular state fair, to last from four to six weeks.

Only the executive committee of the state fair managers, composed of C. N. Cosgrove, Le Sueur; C. M. Griggs, St. Paul; E. W. Randall, St. Paul, and L. D. Baird, Austin, were able to be present at the conference with the members of the semi-centennial commission appointed by the last legislature to devise a plan for the celebration of Minnesota's fiftieth birthday as a member of the Union. J. T. Mannix, Minneapolis; F. B. Lynch, St. Paul, and Dr. C. H. Kohler, Minneapolis, represented the commission. M. B. Cullum, Duluth, and C. C. Whitney, Marshall, were unable to be present.

The members of the state fair board reported that they are heartily in favor of the celebration being held in conjunction with the state fair and that they will co-operate with the commission in making the jubilee one of the greatest and most successful in the history of the Union. It is the intention to make the celebration big enough to advertise Minnesota and her products from one end of the United States to the other.

Queer Cause of Death.

Mankato.—An eight-penny nail in the heart of a cow belonging to Claus Swanson, living in Lafayette, Nicollet county, was responsible for the animal's death. The animal had been ailing for some time and its owner, beleiving it to be suffering from tuberculosis, killed it. After its death an examination disclosed an eight-penny nail imbedded lengthwise in its heart. Holes in adjacent tissues showed that the nail had been traveling about for some time before it finally found lodgment in the heart. It is not unusual for small nails and bits of glass to be found in the udders of cattle, but this is the first case known where a nail has been found in the heart or has caused death.

Accidents.

Minneapolis.—A compilation of the monthly reports for fifteen months ending Dec. 31, 1905, by the [illegible] commissioner shows that during that period there were 1,075 accidents reported to the department. Of these 7.07 per cent were fatal. Limbs were lost in 8.46 per cent of the cases and limbs fractured in 6.06 per cent of the cases.

Of the total number, 23 per cent were under twenty years of age, 36 per cent were between twenty and thirty, 11 per cent between thirty-one and thirty-five and 16 per cent between thirty-six and forty-five.

Division of County.

Warren.—Petitions for the division of Marshall county have been widely circulated. The name of the new county is to be Hiawatha, with Middle River as the county seat.

The eastern part of Marshall county does not favor the division, because it will raise their tax levy. The western part does not favor it because they do not wish to lose the eastern territory just as it is beginning to contribute its proportion of the taxes. Those most vitally interested are the townsite people of Middle River. It bids fair to be a hard fight with the chances in favor of the defeat of the project.

The Indian's Harvest.

Winona.—Just at this time, Indian and white trappers are reaping their annual muskrat harvest, thousands of the skins of the animals being disposed of in this city. Since the ice went out of the sloughs hundreds of muskrats have been caught by the trappers. This year's harvest, while not phenomenal, is said to be larger than any in recent years. In the past two days 2,200 skins have been purchased by the Winona Fur company from Indian trappers. The hides bring an average of 20 cents apiece.

News Notes.

St Paul—Prof. Winchell says Minnesota is safe from earthquakes.

St. Paul—A Minneapolis man is held up and robbed on Como avenue.

Ft. Snelling—New regulations provide for athletic meets for regular soldiers.

Minneapolis—Minnesota grain inspection law not affected by Wisconsin decision.

St. Paul—A. J. Smith will retire as superintendent of schools.

St. Paul—Two cases involving the constitutionality of Ramsey county's salary law were argued before the supreme court.

Austin—Austin sends $1,000 for the San Francisco earthquake sufferers.

Mankato—Judge Lochren has refused to set aside the adjudication in the bankruptcy of the Widell-Finley company.

St. Peter—Seniors of the St. Peter high school gave their class play, "Mr. Bob," in the opera house. The presentation drew a crowded house.

Cass Lake—C. E. Leeman of Cass Lake, president of the Northern Minnesota Firemen's Tournament association, and the secretary have formulated plans for the twelfth annual tournament, which will be held at Cass Lake, June 20, 21, 22 and 23.

Senator Stephen of Crookston is certainly entitled to the support of the Dunn forces in the State convention this year in return for the good work done by him for Dunn two years ago.

It may be good politicts for a candidate for County office to put off his primary election campaign as long as possiable; but it seems to us that it is useless to run for office after the other fellow has all the votes promised.

Any one that is of the opinion that Bob Dunn in politicaly dead, is liable to find out that he is mistaken before the close of that convention June 13th. There is one thing certain and that is that Dunn is in the house of his friends when he is at Duluth.

Wm. McGinty is considering the proposition of trying to get the republican nomination for the next sheriff of Red Lake County If he desides to go into the race he will pole a heavy vote at Thief River Falls, and has also a large aquaintance in other parts of the County.

Ye Editor has been putting in a fair share of his time last week and this getting the articles of incorporation and by laws of the Red Lake River Transportation Co drawn up, and it is getting somewhat tiresome, we will be glad when the board of directors are elected next Saturday when we will turn the matter over to them.

All the candidates for nomination for governor are willing to stand their chance of being hit by republican lightning and are keeping close watch of the clouds. The expeirence of Bob Dunn two years ago has made them all very cautious and they would rather not have the nomination at all than to get it by going into a hot party scrap.

TAKE OUT THE DAMS

The country about Aitkin faces another flood.

There is a story about a creature named Nero, who fiddled while the city of Rome burned. Dogs have been named after him eyer since, but it should be stopped, as it is an insult to the dogs. Yet Nero's fiddle played as sympathetic a strain as do the Minneapolis saw mills which buzz cheerfully, while settlers are bankrupted and a splendid country is laid waste.

A correspondent of the News Tribune of yesterday, from Aitkin, directly charges that the high water is due to the opeoing of the government dams. However, this may be, it is certainly due to the presence of the dams and there is one and only one way to surly prevent such floods in the future —cut out the dams, remove the cause.

Water that should be passing down the river all winter long, is held back. When the snows melt and the spring rains come, the water courses are already full the reservoirs are making lakes and swamps of what should be dry land, and the inevitable result is floods and devastation. When this situation is relieved in one section by the opening of the dams, it is only transferred to another.—The Duluth News Tribune.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

A Republican County Convention for the County of Red Lake is hereby called to be held on Wednesday, June 6th, 1906, at one o'clock p.m. in the City of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota' for the purpose of electing nine delegates to the Republican State Convention, at Duluth Minnesota June 18th, 1906, and such other business as may properly come before the convention. Laugh and Live Long.

It has been aptly said that there is not the remotest corner of the inlet of the minute blood vessels of the human body that does not feel some wavelet from the convulsions occasioned by good hearty laughter. The life principle of the central man is shaken to its innermost depths, sending new tides of life and strength to the surface, thus materially tending to insure good health to the persons who indulge therein. The blood moves more rapidly and conveys a different impression to all the organs of the body as it visits them on that particular mystic journey when the man is laughing from that conveyed at other times. For this reason every good, hearty laugh in which a person indulges tends to lengthen his life, conveying as it does new and distinct stimulus to the vital forces.

Editor SUNBEAM,
Dear Sir.

In responce to a recent communication regarding the swindler's, grafter's, crazy talker's, and other fools of the Clearwater bridge by H.M.L. in the SUNBEAM of the recent issue, we have taken the liberty to respond to the communication and from the appearance of the article therein published, it is undouptely originated in the feeble minded brains of a multitudinary judge, serving a term of sentence while at Stillwater, some time ago. In the first place it certainly would take a foolish minded person like H. M. L. to figure his correct statements, as a person with the least common sence could not start by an article of the kind just published.

If this committee held clean flour in their sack they certainly would not have to be ashamed of it and could cut open the string and give an itimized statement concerning al the matters relative thereto;

It is a matter of fact that there are several persons who have subscribed towards the errection of this bridge, but are holding back their amount of subscriptions subscribed by them, for the reason that this committee has and does so far fail to show a statement of its conditions. But them lacking to show and according to the reputation of them, it is no wonder we are strong opposed, and are requiring an itimized statement thereof;

The grossest lying slander of this bridge committee was caused by themselves, who have the entire community, county, and the nearby villiages, to thank for what they have donated to-wards this errection. But the matter appearing from their own statement has without question tampered their minds to such an extent that their minds has caused them think that the citizens who have taken an active interest in this matter, would check any farther prosecutions, and if this matter arouses any more suspicion in the future, then it has in past, it would welcome the multitudinary judge to crush the remainder of the stone pile at the penteniary, wherein he was welcomed once before.

Yours for another one.

TIME EXTENDED.

Me recieved the following letter this week which explains its self.

W.G. Hunt, Esq.,
Sunbeam, Minn.
Dear Sir.

You will recall that Mr. Steenerson introduced a bill at the beginning of this session of Congress extending the time of payment to settlers on the Red Lake reservation. Rather than to run the chances of not passing the bill separately Mr. Steenerson secured the amendment of the Indian appropriation bill, with the help of Senator Clapp, as follows:-

"That the homestead settler on all ceded Indian reservation in Minnesota who purchased the lands occupied by them as home steads te, and they are hereby, granted an extention of one year time in which to make the payments now provided by law."

Very sincerely yours,

MONEY TO LOAN

I have money to loan on real estate at 7½ per cent. Payments at the land office made for you when you make final proof.

Special attention given to Notary Public work.

Diet and Digestion.

Abstemiousness in diet is very conducive to a good digestion. It is preferable to be a little underfed than at all overfed. Hence we come to one of the first causes of indigestion in the adult, too large a quantity of food. After an ordinary meal the food should all have left the stomach by the end of six or seven hours. If owing to an excessive quantity the stomach cannot deal with the amount some food remains in the stomach and ferments. This creates discomfort, pain, wind, nausea and perhaps vomiting, by means of which the abused stomach gets rid of its burden. If the sufferer is not thus fortunately sick the best thing he can do is to drink a large tumbler of lukewarm water, which will probably induce vomiting and so wash out the stomach. Half a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda added to the fluid will cause still more relief. During the next twenty-four hours the lightest diet, such as a little tea and dried toast, some boiled rice, a little arrowroot or corn flour, should be taken.

Chotohazree at the Gymkhana.

In "Modern India" the author, William Eleroy Curtis, records his meeting with the word gymkhana and "ventures to say that nobody who has not been in India can guess what that means."

And if you want another conundrum, what is a chotohazree? It is customary for smart people to have their chotohazree at the gymkhana, and I think you would be pleased to join them after taking the beautiful drive which leads to the place. Nobody knows where the word was derived from, but it is used to describe a country club—a bungalow hidden under a beautiful grove on the brow of a cliff that overhangs the bay—with all of the appurtenances, golf links, cricket grounds, racket courts and indoor gymnasium, and everybody stops there on an afternoon drive to have chotohazree, which is the local term for afternoon tea and for early morning coffee.

Winding Your Watch.

The old superstitious belief that you will change your luck if you stop winding your watch at night and wind it in the morning may have some slight basis in fact, according to a jeweler, who says that the morning is the proper time to do the winding. This is not only because the hour of rising is for the average man much more regular than that for retiring, but even the soberest and most orderly of men are apt to relax and prone to carelessness at bedtime, when more or less worn by the wear and tear of the day. In this condition the winding is apt to be done in a jerky, irregular sort of way or too far or not far enough. "Nine people out of ten wind their watches on going to bed," said the jeweler, "but if they would do it when they get up, at some regular point in the process of making their toilet, they would do it much better."—Philadelphia Record.

Curious Almshouse.

The most famous almshouse in England is St. Mary's hospital at Chichester. There eight old ladies live actually in the church, which is a fine old building dating from 1680. It was originally a monastery, but when Queen Elizabeth came to visit there she turned it into an almshouse to endure as long as almshouses exist. The old ladies have two neat little rooms each down the sides of the main church, with windows looking out on the garden. They have each a coal supply, a kitchen range, water and gas. At one end of the church is the chapel, where daily services are held. The choir stalls are beautifully carved old oak, the original seats that the monks used. The church stands in a quiet little square.

Too Serious.

While a great many persons probably take themselves too seriously, entertaining an altogether exaggerated opinion of their ability and worth, not many nowadays go to the extreme length of the German whom the English poet Coleridge met at Frankfort. He always took off his hat when he ventured to speak of himself. Were this practice to become general what a number of people would be permanently bareheaded!

Boarding a Hansom.

Have you ever noticed the right way to get into a hansom when two people are riding? Few persons know what to do. In nine cases out of ten the one who enters first seats himself on the off side. But this is wrong. If, on getting in first, you take the near seat, your companion can then enter in ease and comfort, which otherwise he could not.

To Waterproof Canvas.

Scientific American gives this recipe for waterproofing for canvas: Soft soap dissolved in hot water and a solution of iron sulphate added. The sulphuric acid combines with the potash of the soap and the iron oxide is precipitated with the fatty acid as insoluble iron soap. This is washed and dried and mixed with linseed oil.

Masculine.

Mrs. Hix—Mrs. June strikes me as being entirely too masculine for a woman. Mrs. Dix—Yes, indeed. Why, every time she has an ache or a pain she makes as much fuss about it as a man would.

Discretion.

First Lawyer—It seems to me you let that last witness down pretty easily in your cross examination. Second Lawyer—I had to. He is my tailor, and I owe him a big bill.

When a man says, "Of course it's no business of mine," it is a sure sign that he is going to do the best he can to make it his business.

Growing Water Lilies From Seed.

Many of the choicest water lilies, even the magnificent Victoria regia, may be grown from seed. For many years the seed of this lily, when brought to this country, failed to germinate.

It was finally found that by bottling the seeds in the water of the river in which they grew they could be transported safely from the waters of the Amazon to the far west. Here the lily is usually grown with bottom heat, as it is very tender. Seeds started in pots in a temperature of 90 degrees will germinate in about two weeks and may be planted out in the open air when the nights have become warm—usually about the 1st of June—and will bloom the same summer, but cannot be carried through the winter, but must be started afresh each season, either by the purchase of plants or the sowing of seed, the latter being, of course, much more economical, as seeds may be purchased for a few nickels apiece, the plants costing as many dollars.—American Homes and Gardens.

Parsee Burial Customs.

A Bombay correspondent, writing of the burial customs of the Parsees, says: "The approach of that transition we call death is a signal for the relatives to leave the presence of the dying one, the priest alone remaining to whisper Zend-Avesta precepts into his ear. He in turn passes out of the room and admits a dog, who is trained to gaze steadily into the face of the dying one. A dog is accounted the only living creature that can terrorize the evil spirits, so the 'sas-did,' or 'dog stare,' is the last sight the Parsee has on earth. No human shadow must intervene, otherwise the guardian virtue of the dog's gaze is annulled."

Incarnate Umbrellas.

We English, of course, get what we call hardened to horrible climatic changes. Nevertheless I am convinced that our solemnity of demeanor is generated by our gray skies, our piercing east winds, our heavy, yellow fogs and our slushy roads and pavements. Brides Priced.

To us it seems a curious whim on the part of our ancestors of the eighteenth century that in their marriage announcements they should so often choose and with such seeming complacency to enlighten the world with regard to the amount of fortune received with the brides. Here are two cases in point: "Mr. James Coutts of Jeffry's Sq., merchant, to Miss Peagrum of Knightsbridge, £30,000." "W. Smith, gentleman, of the 2d Troop of Horse Guards, to Mrs. [illegible] Gardiner, a maiden lady, aged, 'tis said, near 70, with a fortune of £20,000."—Chambers' Journal.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

An edict of Charles IX. of France, dated 1563, made it a civil offense to offer any guest more than three courses at one meal. If a fourth appeared, the provider of the feast was liable to a fine of 200 francs; while the guests who partook of it could be called upon to pay the authorities 40 francs each.

Lord Avebury, otherwise Sir John Lubbock, was the first person in England to have his photograph taken. M. Deguerre, the co-inventor of the art, came to London to patent his discovery, and paid an early visit to Lord Avebury's father. The son was playing in the garden and was successfully photographed.

At the end of Washington's administration there were 16 states in the union. There was also the "Northwest Territory," as it was called, not yet organized into states—the whole wide region between the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, from which slavery had been forever excluded by a law passed by congress in 1787. The first census of the nation was taken in 1790; and the population was about 4,000,000 (3,929,214).

NATURALISTIC NOTATIONS.

Carrier pigeons never eat when traveling.

White cats with blue eyes are always deaf.

Domesticated dogs only—wild ones never—bark.

A sheep dog has the heaviest brain of any dog.

The smallest quadruped in the world is the pygmy mouse of Siberia.

Giraffes and ant-eaters each have tongues nearly two feet in length.

The only fish that never sleep are said to be the salmon, pike and goldfish.

Tunnels three miles long are dug by certain kinds of South American ants.

The ant, in proportion to its size, has the largest brain of any living creature.

Birds, when perched on trees or bushes, are natural weathercocks, as they invariably roost with their heads to the wind.

The greenfinch is the earliest riser of the bird family. It sometimes begins to pipe at one o'clock on a summer morning. The blackcap comes next, and then the blackbird.

Backache, "The Blues"

Both Symptoms of Organic Derangement in Women—Thousands of Sufferers Find Relief.

Mrs. J. G. Holmes

Emma Cotrely

How often do we hear women say: "It seems as though my back would break," or "Don't speak to me, I am all out of sorts"? These significant remarks prove that the system requires attention.

Backache and "the blues" are direct symptoms of an inward trouble which will sooner or later declare itself. It may be caused by diseased kidneys or some derangement of the organs. Nature requires assistance and at once, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound instantly asserts its curative powers in all those peculiar ailments of women. It has been the standby of intelligent American women for twenty years, and the best judges agree that it is the most universally successful remedy for woman's ills known to medicine.

Read the convincing testimonials of Mrs. Holmes and Mrs. Cotrely.

Mrs. J. C. Holmes, of Larimore, North Dakota, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I have suffered everything with backache and female trouble—I let the trouble run on until my system was in such a condition that I was unable to be about, and then it was I commenced to use Lydia Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. If I had only known how much suffering I would have saved I should have taken it months sooner—for a few weeks' treatment made me well and strong. My backaches and headaches are all gone and I suffer no pain at my monthly periods, whereas before I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I suffered intense pain."

Mrs. Emma Cotrely, 109 East 12th Street, New York City, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I feel it my duty to tell all suffering women of the relief I have found in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. When I commenced taking the Compound I suffered everything with backaches, headaches, and female troubles. I am completely cured and enjoy the best of health, and I owe it all to you."

When women are troubled with irregular, suppressed or painful periods, weakness, displacements or ulceration, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation of the female organs, backache, bloating (or flatulence), general debility, indigestion and nervous prostration, or are beset with such symptoms as dizziness, faintness, lassitude, excitability, irritability, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, "all gone" and "want-to-be-left-alone" feelings, blues and hopelessness, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles.

No other medicine has such a record of cures of female troubles. No other medicine in the world has received this widespread and unqualified endorsement. Refuse to buy any substitute.

FREE ADVICE TO WOMEN.

Remember, every woman is cordially invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham if there is anything about her symptoms she does not understand. Mrs. Pinkham is the daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, her assistant before her decease, and for twenty-five years since her advice has been freely and cheerfully given to every ailing woman who asks for it. Her advice and medicine have restored to health innumerable women. Address, Lynn, Mass.

MINNESOTA ITEMS.

Northfield—St. Olaf won the debate from Gustavus Adolphus on the question of reciprocity with Canada.

Crookston—The Central Minnesota Millers' club held a meeting here and a large number of North Dakota millers were in attendance.

Minneapolis—A hot coal from a passing engine set fire to the viaduct at Fifteenth avenue southeast and Eighth street, shortly before midnight.

St. Paul—Warrants have been sworn out by Chairman Franklyn H. Griggs of the Republican city committee of St. Paul, charging two men with illegal registration.

Minneapolis—Two horses belonging to J. Ermanski were burned to death in a brisk fire that destroyed Ermanski's barn in the rear of 724 Washington avenue south.

St. Paul—The Olivet M. E. church on Juno street, between Victoria and View streets, burned to the ground entailing a loss of $1,000, covered by insurance. The fire is thought to be work of fire bugs and the police are investigating.

Minneapolis—John Hreebuy is near death at the Swedish hospital, and John Nooko is locked up at the South Side station charged with assaulting him with an ax during a general fight on the flats under the Washington avenue bridge.

Minneapolis—Within four hours of the time he left home, declaring that he would make way with himself, the dead body of John Simm was found hanging to a tree in an alley near Seventeenth avenue south and Thirty-first street.

Minneapolis—John Johannsen, 2900 Washington avenue N., and James Nelson, 206 Central avenue, were overcome by gas in the Crocker hotel, 246 Third avenue S., and were taken to the city hospital, where they were restored to consciousness.

St. Paul—The State board of control opened bids for two new buildings at the school for the feeble-minded at Faribault. Five Faribault contractors put in bids for each of the buildings, the aggregate cost of the two buildings being nearly $30,000.

Rushford—Work on the new Lutheran church has already begun. The structure will be located on the corner opposite the new high school building, and will be built of Rushford lime stone. When completed it will have cost over $20,000.

Austin—The big tabernacle meeting conducted by Evangelist W. A. Sunday here during the past five weeks have closed. The tabernacle holds over 3,000 and it has been crowded nightly. Over 800 have gone forward to indicate their purpose to lead a better life.

Washington—Minnesota postmasters appointed: Oscar Werner at Onamia, Mille Lacs county, vice J. E. Franklin, resigned; Andre N. Seter at Cisco, Polk county, vice B. E. Bjelland, resigned; Herbert S. Aldrich at Wrightstown, Otter Tail county, vice Edgar Aldrich, resigned.

Crookston—The candidacy of Senator A. D. Stephens of this city for the nomination for governor of Minnesota at the Republican convention to be held at Duluth on June 13, was enthusiastically indorsed Saturday evening by his townsmen in the organization of the "Andy Stephens club."

Tower—Executive Agent S. F. Fullerton of the state fish and game commission, and his crew of twelve men now are in camp at Pike River Falls, and all preparations have been made for gathering pike eggs. They are camped below the falls of Pike river which flows into lake Vermillion, and are about six miles from Tower.

Clontarf—While burning grass on her lawn, the clothing of Mrs. Margaret O'Brien, an old resident of this place, caught fire. The aged woman lost her presence of mind and ran for several blocks, blowing the flames so that soon she was a human torch. She was frightfully burned about the head and breast and lived only a short time after the flames were extinguished.

Wayzata—The state game wardens are having a busy time with poachers who are spearing bass around Lake Minnetonka. Yesterday Deputy Wardens J. W. Peterson and J. W. Centerville reported that they had arrested K. P. Gregg of Minneapolis, Henry Jergensen of Spring Park and Charles Verrell of Minneapolis near Carrman's bay. Each of them paid a fine of $10 and costs.

Eveleth—Attempts to pass a $50 note of the Confederate States of America on the Miners' National bank have been made. The same bill was presented three times by different persons to Leo Shapiro, cashier of the bank. It was what is known as a "Jefferson Davis note" dated at Richmond, 1864, and was faded so that the amount could not be readily discerned.

Minneapolis—The system of having train auditors take care of transportation, thus leaving conductors to look after the operation of trains alone, which was recently inaugurated by the Great Northern, has proved satisfactory. There are twenty-five auditors in service at present, and the number will be increased to about seventy as soon as the right kind of men are available.

Duluth—Rev. R. Brockmeyer of St. Clement's church was robbed of a small hand-satchel containing $107.50 while he was making out a draft in the City National bank. There is no clue to the thief. The minister set the satchel containing the money, which was all in silver, on a small settee within reach of his hand while he went to the exchange window to make out a draft. When he turned to pick it up again it had disappeared.

Minneapolis—Special policeman is a title not liked by the women of the Minneapolis Improvement league, who have applied to the mayor for appointment as special sanitary inspectors.

Minneapolis—Representatives of all the Twin City lodges of the Sons of Norway met and decided to celebrate the annual festival of St. Hans at Como Park on the regular festival day, June 24.

Belle Plaine—The business men of this place tonight met in the city hall and organized a commercial club, the object of which will be to further anything which is of interest to the people of Belle Plaine.

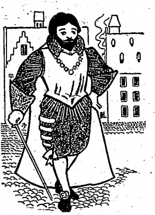
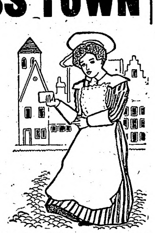
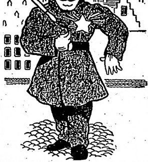
SPOTLESS TOWN



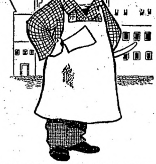
This is the Mayor of Spotless Town,
The brightest man for miles around.
The shining light of wisdom can
Reflect from such a polished man.
And so he says to high and low
"The brightest use SAPOLIO."



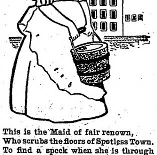
The Cook of Spotless Town, you see,
Who takes the cake, as you'll agree,
She holds it in her fingers now,
It isn't light—but anyhow
'Twill brighten her domestic woe.
A cake of plain SAPOLIO.



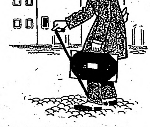
This brilliant man walks up and down
Upon the streets of Spotless Town.
The glitter of his shining star
Arrests attention from afar.
It lights the beat and goes to show
That naught can beat SAPOLIO.



This is the butcher of Spotless Town
Whose tools are bright as his renown
To leave them stained were indiscreet
For folks would then abstain from meat
And so he brightens trade you know,
By polishing with SAPOLIO.



This is the Maid of fair renown,
Who scrubs the floors of Spotless Town.
To find a speck when she is through
Would take a pair of specs or two.
And her employment isn't slow
For she employs SAPOLIO.



This lean M. D. is Dr. Brown,
Who fares but ill in Spotless Town.
The town is so confounded clean,
It is no wonder he is lean.
He's lost all patients now you know
Because they use SAPOLIO.

WHAT IS SAPOLIO?

It is a solid, handsome cake of scouring soap which has no equal for all cleaning purposes except the laundry. To use it is to value it. What will SAPOLIO do? Why, it will clean paint, make oil cloths bright and give the floors, tables and shelves a new appearance. It will take the grease off the dishes and off the pots and pans. You can scour the knives and forks with it and make the tin things shine brightly. The wash-basin, the bath-tub, even the greasy kitchen sink, will be as clean as a new pin if you use SAPOLIO. One cake will prove all we say. Be a sensible housekeeper and try it.

A WEEK'S NEWS IN CONDENSED FORM

RECORD OF MOST INTERESTING EVENTS TOLD IN BRIEFEST MANNER POSSIBLE.

HOME AND FOREIGN ITEMS

Information Gathered from All Quarters of the Civilized World and Prepared for the Perusal of the Busy Man.

ANTI-TRUST NOTES.

The anxiously awaited message of President Roosevelt, accompanying a portion of the report on the investigation of the giant Standard Oil trust which has been conducted under the auspices of the department of commerce and labor, which was sent to congress arraigns the corporation and its officials for taking rebates in defiance of the Elkins act, and points the way for legislation that will clip the wings of the Rockefeller combination to some extent.

Standard officials in New York issued a statement in which the administration indictment is called unjust and untruthful, the business methods of the combine are defended and there are lightly veiled sneers at the president's activity in generously offering advice on a wide range of subjects from race suicide to affairs of state.

Garfield's report recited specific instances in which railroads gave the Standard Oil rebates, enabling it to crush out competition. The rebates amounted to $750,000 a year.

Indiana will investigate the charge that the Standard Oil had secret rate on shipments within that state.

Railroad traffic officials deny favoritism to the oil combine and declare that all their rates are published, as required by law.

CONGRESSIONAL NEWS.

The Allison court review amendment to the rate regulation bill has been accepted by the president and the conservative leaders in the senate, clearing the way for the passage of that measure. Both sides claim the victory.

Free distribution of flower and garden seeds was provided for by a house appropriation after a hot fight, the members fearing the effect on the next election if their gifts to their constituents are cut off.

Agitation for an appropriation to pay the traveling expenses of the president when he goes about the country has been begun by some members of congress.

Senator Tillman, in a speech in the senate, attacked the records of seven federal judges and said these cases are ample reason for curbing the power of all inferior courts to interfere with the orders of the interstate commerce commission.

The solution of the rate bill problem in the senate is found in a court review amendment by Senator Allison which united the Republicans in support of the measure and is expected to hasten its passage.

Samuel Gompers, in a final appeal for the passage of the eight-hour law by congress, upholds the right of labor to vote against congressmen who oppose them.

President Roosevelt declined to recommend that congress make a $200,000,000 loan to rebuild San Francisco.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Messages from British underwriters received in San Francisco indicate that they will stick to the letter of their policies and contest every claim for damages.

Accountans at Chicago examining the books of the American Reserve Bond company failed to find a single listed security upon which cash can be realized at once.

The Chicago mail train, No. 18, east-bound, and the Chicago & St. Louis express, No. 21, west-bound, collided while running on the Pennsylvania railroad at full speed, 18 miles from Altoona, Pa. Seven persons were killed and 20 injured.

Lake commerce is at a standstill at Chicago, no effort having been made to fill places of strikers.

Sir Henry Elzear Taschereau, chief justice of Canada, has tendered his resignation from the supreme court and it has been accepted by the government.

COAL STRIKE AVERTED.

The Anthracite Coal Miners Vote to Accept the Propositihn of the Mine Operators.

Scranton, Pa.—On advice of President Mitchell representing the subscale committee, the miner's convention unanimously voted to adopt the first proposition of the operators—a continuation of the award of the anthracite coal commission with the modification that the term for which it shall continue shall be mutually agreed upon. The operators suggested a continuance of at least three years.

The action of the convention together with a request for a conferenc was telegraphed to Chairman George F. Baer of the operators' committe, and answer was received agreeing to the same.

The only matters to be discussed are the length of time the award shall continue and the provision that there shall be no discrimination against the men who obeyed Mitchell's suspension order. It is practically certain that the operators will not grant any suggestion for a two-year agreement, as that would throw the next conference into a presidential year.

As the miners do not desire a long term agreement, the chances are that the three-year agreement will be adopted.

An intimation has reached here from President Baer that the operators will not discriminate against the men who quit work, and the local representatives of the coal companies say the same thing. It looks, therefore, as if a strike has been averted and as if the miners will return to work May 14.

The news that the convention had decreed against a strike was received with joy throughout this region, although as yet there have been no demonstrations other than individual expressions. To the miners the news is very satisfactory. They are willing to strike if John Mitchell thought they ought to, but they are glad that he has decided otherwise.

$25,000 Fire.

Elk River, Minn. — The village of Zimmerman, north of here suffered a fire loss of about $25,000, the stores of Harry English & Co., and J. W. Mode & Co., being destroyed.

The postoffice was located in English & Co.'s store and all the records and mail was burned. The fire started in this building and was under a good headway when discovered. The village was without fire fighting apparatus of any kind and was at the mercy of the flimes. The origin of the fire was unknown.

Trouble at Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, Man.—This city is on the verge of a big labor strike. The painters presented an ultimatum that if they were not given 40 cents per hour and a nine hour day in the summer they will quit. Seven hundred are involved.

The blacksmiths and boilermakers in the founderies have also given the management notice that if they are not given an increase in wages they will leave work.

Rat Fight

Two Harbors, Minn.—Harvey Thomas of this place invited a number of friends to his home to spend a social evening. When Thomas went to the cellar to get the eatables he found a swarm of rats devouring the refreshments. He attempted to drive them away, the rodents attacked him and he called for assistance. Armed with clubs his guests went to the cellar and in an ensuing battle killed over three score rats. The others fled.

Robbed the P. O.

La Crosse, Wis.—The postoffice at La Crescent, Minn just across the river was robbed and burned to the ground early in the morning. The thieves escaped with the bulk of the money. A large amount of stamps was missed by the robbers, being secure in a safe in the residence of E. B Webster. postmaster. The money secured is about $50, The fire loss is $500.

Victim of Earthquake.

St. Paul.—John Fisher, who became insane during the earthquake in San Francisco, was very violent while on the way to Chicago and caused considerable trouble for the passengers and train crew of a Northern Pacific train recently. He was chained to a seat and when the train arrived in the city the police ambulance took him to the county jail. He was taken to Chicago.

Killed.

Pierre, S. D.—Thomas Eagle, a young man employed in the Richardson railroad camp, about five miles up Bad river from Fort Pierre, was drowned while attempting to ford the stream on a pony. The current carried the animal off its feet and threw the young man into the water. The body has not yet been recovered.

Will Face Renewed Charge.

St. Petersburg.—It is officially announced that Maxim Gorky will be prosecuted again on a charge of fomenting an anti-Russian and revolutionary movement abroad,

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Driven Insane.

Duluth—Alfred Johnson, a homesteader of the Little Fork country, went insane as a result of his long isolation and he has had a terrible experience.

A neighbor happened to visit the Johnson homestead and he was surprised to find that the house had apparently not been inhabited for days. The door was open and the interior in disorder. The live stock were eager for food and water, having been without either for some time.

Search was made for Johnson and the first clue found was the bloody footprints of some man who had been wandering barefooted through the woods and swamps.

Johnson was found at last sitting on a log near Gay Parker's homestead. He was half naked. He had just set fire to Parker's barn, though the flames had not obtained much headway, and the manifestly insane man was stretching out his bare feet toward the fire, saying that nobody could worship Jesus with wet feet.

Johnson was taken care of, and is now at Grand Rapids, where his condition will be inquired into by the probate judge of Itasca county.

Isolation frequently drives homesteaders insane, and many who are not actually insane are considered queer.

Commerce of Great Lakes.

Duluth.—A good deal of the size of the traffic on the Great Lakes during the season of navigation may be gathered from the fact that, according to statistics compiled by government engineers in the Lake Superior district, Duluth, a port more than 1,000 miles from salt water, stands next to New York in respect to mean monthly freight movement. Last year the freight brought in and shipped out of St. Louis bay amounted to 22,676,145 tons, valued at $196,751,583, and this is exclusive of receipts of logs amounting to 34,285,000 feet. The average monthly value of this commerce was nearly $25,000,000, so that if there were open navigation all the year round and the monthly record were maintained the total would be about $300,000,000. These shipments and receipts represented an increase of 6,059,128 tons, or 36.46 per cent, over the total of 1904, and an increase in cash value amounting to $39,518,374.

Deer Beats Train.

Hibbing.—There was an exciting race between a Great Northern ore train and a deer, and a number of wagers were laid by the train crew on the result. The deer popped out of the woods about midway between here and Swan river, took the edge of the track and trotted along ahead of the train. The engineer opened the throttle a trifle wider, but the deer put a little more ginger into his legs and kept ahead. Then the throttle was thrown wide open and the train shot forward with greatly increased speed. Still the deer managed to keep ahead for about 200 yards further. Finally, just as the result of the race was getting in doubt, and the iron horse was slowly creeping upon its forest rival, the animal turned off into the woods. It had won a race of nearly two miles.

Much Money.

St. Paul.—The state closed April with a cash balance of $533,936.76 in the revenue fund, a decrease since a month ago of about $100,000, but more than $300,000 better than the condition a year ago. On March 31, 1906, the revenue fund totaled $636,127.32. On April 30, 1905, it was down to $176,256. From now on for several months the expenses of the state government will be larger than the income. The expenses of the government during April were $287,000 and the income something like $185,000. With that much income during the next three months the state ought to close the fiscal year without an overdraft. Last July the fiscal year closed with a shortage of nearly $450,000.

Inheritance Tax.

St. Paul.—The first eight months of the operation of the Somerville inheritance tax has yielded $58,181.13 for the state.

Eighteen estates have paid the inheritance tax since the law went into effect Sept. 12, 1905. This is a graded tax according to the size of the estate involved. Inheritances, bequests and gifts up to $10,000 are exempt. From $10,000 to $50,000 the tax is 1½ per cent; $50,000 to $100,00, 3 per cent; $100,000 or over, 5 per cent.

News Notes.

Mankato—The donations to the California sufferers now total about $800.

Ashby—Frank Johnson died after an operation for an abscess on the brain. He is survived by his wife and several children.

Ada—A ministerial conference is in session at Trinity church. About thirty Scandinavian clergymen are in attendance.

Kenyon—Kenyon village and citizens will send $150 to the California earthquake sufferers.

St. Paul—State agents are recommended to look after discharged prisoners and insane patients.

St. Paul—The Civic league proposes to have St. Paul cleaned and presentable by the end of the second week in May.

St. Paul—The Chicago Great Western appeals to the courts from an order directing a cut in the switching charge to South St. Paul.

Bemidji—The new handle factory here will be a great addition to the industries of the town.

MINNESOTA ITEMS.

St. Paul—The Minnesota Boat club arranges to hold two regattas this season.

St. Paul—Two men are run down in the railway yards and one is killed instantly.

Mankato—Over 8,000 persons viewed the exhibit of the Minnesota state art society in this city.

St. Paul—The annual memorial service of the Order of the Eastern Star is held at Masonic Temple.

Hastings—John Stoffel of Vermillion, lost a two-year-old steer, a cow, and two dogs from hydrophobia.

Blooming Prairie—The village and citizens of Blooming Prairie have contributed $453.67 for the relief of San Francisco sufferers.

Minneapolis—The Minnesota fish commission has served notice on the loggers that they must give the fish a chance to get by.

St. Augusta—The dam of the Roller Mills went out and the damage amounted to about $1,000. It will be immediately repaired.

Perham—F. A. Schuetz, superintendent of the Perham public schools, has tendered his resignation, and Daniel Costigan of Lawler, Iowa, has been elected to succeed him.

Winona—Joseph Chaplewski, who was charged with holding up and taking from Joseph J. Hennessey, a farmer, the sum of $10.50, entered a plea of guilty to grand larceny in the first degree.

St. Peter—While making repairs on a gasoline engine, Ole Frederickson, a contractor, lighted a match and a small quantity of gasoline in the tank exploded. Mr. Frederickson was badly burned about the face and head.

Harmony—A silver medal contest was held at the opera house last week under the auspices of the local W. C. T. U. organization, seven matrons taking part. Mrs. C. G. Selvig won the honors.

Minneapolis—Fifteen loaves of bread for each of the 250,000 absolutely destitute and needy people of San Francisco and vicinity has been furnished through the generosity of Minneapolis.

Cokato—Mrs. Casja Eckman celebrated her one hundredth birthday yesterday in the town of Stockholm, three miles south of this place. A daughter and two sons were present.

Mendota—Frank Zemo, twenty-eight years old, was instantly killed by a Milwaukee freight train three miles west of here. Coroner Kramer of Dakota county was called, and after viewing the remains ordered them taken to Hastings.

Towner—After catching 1,000,000 pike eggs, S. F. Fullerton, executive agent of the state game and fish commission, returned yesterday disgusted. He had expected to catch at least 150,000,000 and perhaps 200,000,000.

Winona—Judge Snow filed an opinion overruling Judge Buck of the municipal court in his contention that the city ordinance prohibiting females from entering saloons or soliciting drinks there is unconstitutional and contravenes the right of persons. The case went up on a writ of certioriari.

Duluth—Matt Vranes and Matt Ivankovich, the Austrians who were convicted of manslaughter in the first degree, were sentenced this afternoon by Judge Cant to terms of twenty years each in the penitentiary at Stillwater.

Crookston—This section of the country is being flooded with counterfeit half dollars of the 1901 series. The bogus coins are a good imitation and there is little difficulty in passing them. Government officials are making an investigation.

St. Paul—Mayor Smith is re-elected. Hoffman gave him a closer run than Wright gave him two years ago. Then the mayor went in by about 4,000 plurality, which Hoffmann has cut down to about 2,500. Hoffmann gained over the Wright vote throughout the city, but the gain was not large enough to elect him.

Minneapolis—The new code has made many minor changes in the railroad laws, which the members of the railroad commission are turning up every day. The latest discovery is that complaints brought before the commission must be verified before they can be made the basis for a hearing.

Duluth—The Great Lakes Dredge and Dock company, the largest dredging concern on the lakes and one of the largest in the world, has just closed contracts with the government for the dredging of nearly 2,000,000 cubic yards of material in the Duluth-Superior harbor. It is the largest amount of harbor improvement since the government's continuous contract of 3,000,000 yards several years ago.

St. Paul—A squad of five policemen chased two young men through the business district and the excitement caused all the spectators to join in the chase, so that at the end of the run the pursuers numbered nearly two thousand.

Two Harbors—News comes from a tie camp three miles west of Beaver Bay, in this county, that James Carum, who was running the camps, committed suicide by shooting himself.

Mankato—The annual meeting of the pastors of the Swedish Methodist church of the Minneapolis district closed, after four days devoted to theological discussions and sermons.

St. Peter—Rigid restrictions are to be thrown about the retail liquor traffic in the village of Kasota. Two years ago the town voted out its saloons, but at the last election, held April 3, license carried by the narrow margin of one vote, the result being 75 to 76.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

While the columns of THE SUNBEAM are always open for discussion on any public improvement, by our patrons, they must in the future avoid any personalitys. Express your opinion on any public question and they will be published, but you must settle your personal differences among your selves, and sign all articles with your full name as we have trouble enough of our own, without shouldering yours.

Editor Latta of the Plummer Pioneer says that this summer will probably see one of the hottest political battles that has ever occured or ever will occur in Red Lake County over the County seat removal, well we have a good well of ice cold water up here and plenty of shade Charles if it gets to hot, and we might turn the rays of THE SUNBEAM to warm things up a little, if it gets to cool.

It will soon be time to hold political conventions. They are the places to freely express opinions as to candidates. When the convention has made the nominations it is the duty of the party to support the nominees. The convention is the place to make necessary changes. Let those attend the primaries who are interested in good government and see that only clean men are nominated. Thus will the party be benefitted and the country maintained.

The Red Lake Gazette last week announced that Luman C. Simons, of Red Lake Falls, had filed as a candidate for the Republican nomination for state senator from the district composed of Red Lake, Beltrami, Clearwater and Norman counties.

Mr. Simons, it is said, stands very well in Beltrami county, but he will have considerable opposition in Red Lake county and if he carries it at all, it will be by a very small majority.

Norman county is quite likely to present a candidate for this office, and there may also be one from Beltrami county.—Thief River Falls News.

WILL BUILD BOATS.

A few of the share holders of the Red Lake Transportation Company met at Kratka on last Saturday and elected the first board of Director, who will have their first meeting at Highlanding tomorrow afternoon, at which time the question of building a line of boats for carring freight and passengers on the river will be arranged. One of the amusing features about the whole transaction up to the present time has been the splendid system of the organization of the farmers and business men living along the river to push the matter to a sucessful termination.

There has never been any one of the leaders or of the present board of Directors that have asked for any compromise, with the Thief River Falls logging Company, nor will there be any request made by any member of the board of directors for any compromise. The Company will simply proceed to put a line of boats on this river that will be run in the interest of the farmers and business men living between Thief River Falls and Little Oak, and they will put on boats controled by men who are not looking for any opportunity to sell out to any other company.

EDITORS MEET.

The Red River Valley Editorial meeting, held at Thief River Falls last Friday, was not as largely attended, (owing to it being harvest time) as it should have been drew out quite a large number of the editors, who were well entertained by the citizens of that city. The smoke social given at the Antlers club and the banquet were good advertisements for that live city and will no doubt be returned in kind by the editors that were so loryaly entertained.

FIX UP THE ROADS.

As it is getting about time of year to start road work let us 11 towns settlers take hold of the matter with a will and a determination to make a start this year to get our roads in a passiable condition. Do not let us start out to "buck" the town boards or the road overseers, but appear where ordered at 7 o'clock a.m. and do a fair days work towards improveing the bad places in the roads in our respective road Districts.

Do not come out in the morning with your pipe and tobacco sack with your mind made up to put in a day of lesure, but with your coat off determined to do a days work.

There is nothing more contemptible than the fawner—the fellow who is any where and every where, ever ready to gush over anyone from whom he hopes to secure some favor. If the fawner happens to run a newspaper you can almost tell from his paper the office or favor that he is hunting. He will speak flattering words of praise and commendation, and laud to the very skies some one in power politically, but will turn around tomorrow and just as vigorously condemn that same political power if some one else happens to control the favors. The fawners is one of the disgusting elements in politics. He is always weak and generally corrupt.

Lynch Law.

In an article in Law Notes on "The Origin of the Term 'Lynch Law'" mention was made of the fact that formerly the term "Lydford law" was used in the same sense in England. A North Carolina judge in a recent case quoted the following lines:

I oft have heard of Lydford law—
How in the morn they hang and draw
And sit in judgment after.

They seem to show the existence of a similar summary punishment in England.

Unconscious Sarcasm.

A Scotch visitor to the Carlyles, in Cheyne row, was much struck with the sound proof room which the sage had contrived for himself in the attic, lighted from the top, and where no sight or sound from outside could penetrate. "My certes, this is fine!" cried the old friend, with unconscious sarcasm. "Here ye may write and study all the rest of your life and no human being be one bit the wiser."

Laugh and Live Long.

It has been aptly said that there is not the remotest corner of the inlet of the minute blood vessels of the human body that does not feel some wavelet from the convulsions occasioned by good hearty laughter. The life principle of the central man is shaken to its innermost depths, sending new tides of life and strength to the surface, thus materially tending to insure good health to the persons who indulge therein. The blood moves more rapidly and conveys a different impression to all the organs of the body as it visits them on that particular mystic journey when the man is laughing from that conveyed at other times. For this reason every good, hearty laugh in which a person indulges tends to lengthen his life, conveying as it does new and distinct stimulus to the vital forces.

Get your seed at Rhoda, all kinds of garden seed on hand.

Come and see us when you are ready to prove up on your land.

Look out for the logs to come thick, Paddy Sullivan and crew are up river.

Bring your wool to the Singer store and they will pay you the highest market price for it.

The boats on the river are having a strenous time trying to handle the traffic at the present time.

Jerry and Katie O'Brien returned Saturday evening from their three weeks visit at Crystal N. D.

W.A. Swanson came up from Rhoda Tuesday after part of the school supplies for their new school house.

Singer Brothers the Rhoda merchants are getting all their goods for their store by the river rout, by way of Sunbeam.

The bridge at the Rollinson place is now in an impassiable condition owing to the high stage of water in the Clearwater and the soft banks.

A car load of seed potatoes, choice clear seeds stock. Early Rose, Triumph, and Burbanks, in 150lbs. sacks at $2.25 per sack on track here. S.H Sharback 1st door south of postoffice, Thief River Falls

If you are in want of any seed potatoes this spring, call for them at Singer's store, where they have a hundred bushels of choice seed potataes left for sale.

Farmers, who are going to do fencing this spring should call on E. B. Laneger, at Plummer Pioneer Hardware Store, for all kinds of fencing. Will make prices right.

The lumber for the creamery at Rollinsons place on the Clearwater river and all the machinery for the same will be shipped up the Red Lake River to Priest Point and taken from there by teams

The roads are still very bad in to Thief River Falls and Plummer and the people living on the 11 towns are depending on the Red Lake River for their road to get their freight and supplies into the Country.

The big steam boat passed here Tuesday night with a heavy load of freight for Red Lake agency and other points. They lightened their load somewhat at this place and had been engaged at the same business for several other points between here and The Falls.

The logs have been going down the river in a steady stream for the past 10 days, but there has been no great amount of crowding done up to the present time, and there seems to be a dispasitian on the part of the lumbermen to put a few more men on to look after hurrying them along than there was last year.

Pat Sullivan passed by here on Tuesday with a crew of men on his way to the Red Lake to bring down the drive for the Grand Forks Lumber Company. They were being towed up river by the Dan Patch boat and it was a big undertaking for the little fellow to push its heavy load up stream against the strong currant, but as that famous cook Swanson has charge of the cooking department for the crew, they were not worrowing about the slow time being made as they were sure to get plenty to eat.

The musketo is again abroad in the land.

Wallace Grace will commence the erection of our new school house next week.

The spring term of school will commence in the Swanson district in the town of Deer Park on next Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Eve and Mrs. P. Sullivan returned home from a five days visit at Thief River Falls Tuesday evening.

Walt McAndrees is finding a market for his surpluss wood with the steam boat running from Thief River Falls to Red Lake.

Thomas Jacobson the Highlanding post master, is buying cows and will go into the stock raising business and dairying on quite an extensive scals.

Mail carrier Vattendahl reports that the Clearwater drive passed the Rollinson place yesterday afternoon and the river is falling rapidly at that point.

Road overseer Julious Halverson of this district will commence road work in this district Monday morning, as Jerry O'Brien and ye editor seemed to be the most at leasure of any of the farmers, he ordered them out first.

Mr. Albert Spokley and E.T. Emerson will move on their farms and put in a large garden and have some breaking done. as this is the kind of land up this way that will produce crops and give returns for all money invested.

Jim O'Brien and Joe Maxwel are putting in quite an extensive garden this spring and will contract to supply the citizens of Thief River Falls with fresh vegetables every morning by the lightning express boat "Dan Patch."

Our printer Devil Elmer Eve is going down to Thief River Falls to visit his best girl next week, which will leave us alone in the mechanical department' but if we can hire an editor for a few days we will endeavor to get along.

Edward Singer of the firm of Singer Bros. at Rhoda, is still enjoying his vacation at driving logs at Deer river. There has been a private detective employed to give us the replys of the verious lamper jacks, if he tells them who he is and where he lives, however we hope they wont let him drown while wadeing down the Mississippi.

MONEY TO LOAN

I have money to loan on real-estate at 7½ per cent. Payments at the land office made for you when you make final proof.

An Arabian Legend.

The Arabians had a tradition that when the devil started forth from his own place to the garden of Eden he was too lazy to walk and begged all the animals, one after another, to carry him. All refused except the serpent, which was then a quadruped and the most beautiful of all beasts. Yielding to the entreaties of Satan, the serpent took up the devil on its back and carried him the rest of the way, no one knows how far, and after the consequences of the devil's entry into the garden became apparent the angels were commanded to look up the serpent and punish it, so Michael cut off its legs, and it was doomed henceforth to travel about as best it could flat on the ground.

A Desperate Case.

Walk O. Nights—Doctor, what is a simple remedy for sleeplessness? Doctor—Let the person count till he falls asleep. Walk O. Nights—He can't count. It's the baby.

The honor we receive of those who fear and stand in awe of us is no true honor.—Montaigne.

Why the Devil Has Cloven Hoofs.

Legends of the devil are quite common in Ireland, but the one which is most interesting and least known perhaps is that which tells why the prince of the infernal regions has split hoofs like those of a cow beast. Moore alludes to the legend in his story of St. Kevin and Kathleen at Glendalough. In that story Moore makes St. Kevin throw his former ladylove over the cliff in order to be rid of her importunities, but the peasants of the Glendalough district give the story a more poetical touch. They insist that it was not Kathleen that was thrown over the cliff, but that it was Satan, who had assumed the form of the lady in order to tempt the saint. The moment the prince of evil toppled over the edge of the yawning abyss he spread his batlike wings and sailed away in safety, much to the surprise of the holy saint. Later on the devil again attempted to lay a snare for St. Kevin, but the saint managed to get the arch fiend on holy ground, where, of course, he was helpless. While the devil was in this helpless condition Kevin sawed off his legs and attached cows' hoofs to the stumps. Since that day Satan has been cloven footed and will be until the end of time.

Echoes and Architects.

"It is possible to make echoes," said an architect. "It is, indeed, easier to make than to destroy them. In the past men built their great temples and cathedrals with no thought of acoustics; hence when the preacher preached echoes rolled freely amid the groinings of the roof, down the rows of sculptured columns and round and round the nave. With wires strung here and with tapestries spread there, many of the echoes of the old world buildings have been obliterated. There are echo experts—builders acquainted with the science of acoustics whose specialty is echoes' destruction. Sometimes their tasks are hard. Today an architect takes thought of the echo. His building is constructed so as to exclude this intruder. And, knowing how to exclude it, he knows how to welcome it also. I have frequently in landscape work put up summer houses and arranged rocks so as to create an echo there."—Exchange.

Flogging.

Flogging, in public and otherwise, is not of mediaeval origin. In the middle ages ridicule and not physical suffering was the means employed for the correction of wrongdoing; hence the pillory, the stocks and the thewe—a chair suspended high over the heads of the crowd, in which women, generally scolds, were brought to a sweet reasonableness—but the whipping post belongs to the Tudor age. The Elizabethan servant question was met by flogging girls for idleness on Sunday morning. But it was in the Hanoverian period that flogging was carried to excess. As late as 1804 six women were publicly flogged in Gloucester, England, because they had been found begging.

European Jiu Jitsu.

A French teacher of boxing points out that an art of self defense approximately equivalent to jiu jitsu was known in Europe in the seventeenth century. Its principles are expounded in a work by one Nicolas Peters, published at Amsterdam in 1674 and bearing the lengthy explanatory title: "The art of wrestling and how one can protect oneself in all kinds of quarrels that may occur; how one can with agility and rapidity repel all unfair attacks and meet one's adversary with science." The work is illustrated. The author apparently anticipated many of the characteristic grips of the Japanese exponents of today.

An Island City.

Usually Effective.

"Sometimes," said the merchant, "I feel like the poet who wanted a lodge in some vast wilderness. I yearn for solitude and silence."

"Well," replied his friend sympathetically, "it's an expensive taste to gratify, but you might start in by taking your advertisement out of the newspapers."—Washington Star.

A Trifle Better.

Professor—Pray excuse me for keeping you waiting for a few minutes, gentlemen. Unfortunately I have come without the manuscript of my lecture, but I have sent my little boy for it. Little Boy (entering the hall)—Mother says she can't find the manuscript of your lecture, but I've brought the book you copied it from.

Awful Thought!

Molly—Papa, I wish you'd close the door of your room when gentlemen are calling on me. Your snores are something fearful. Dad—Well, it won't hurt 'em. Molly—Perhaps not, but they might think it's hereditary.

The Benefit.

She—So you really imagine that smoking benefits you. He—I know it does. My mother-in-law leaves the room the minute I light my pipe.

It Looks That Way.

Apropos of the distinction between an amateur and a professional, is a man a professional if he marries for money?—Life.

The Merit of Good Work.

CAME WELL RECOMMENDED

He Was Not Like Some New and Untried "Feller" Among the Girls.

The buxom maid had been hinting that she did not think much of working out, and this in conjunction with the nightly apearance of a rather sheepish young man caused her mistress much apprehension, relates Everybody's Magazine.

"Martha, is it possible that you are thinking of getting married?"

"Yes'm," admitted Martha, blushing.

"Not that young fellow who has been calling on you lately?"

"Yes'm, he's the one."

"But you have known him only a few days."

"Three weeks come Thursday," corrected Martha.

"Do you think that is long enough to know a man before taking such an important step?"

"Well," answered Martha with spirit, "'tain't 's if he was some new feller. He's well recommended; a perfectly lovely girl I know was engaged to him for a long while."

WORST CASE OF ECZEMA.

Spread Rapidly Over Body—Limbs and Arms Had to Be Bandaged—Marvelous Cure by Cuticura.

"My son, who is now twenty-two years of age, when he was four months old began to have eczema on his face, spreading quite rapidly until he was nearly covered. We had all the doctors around us, and some from larger places, but no one helped him a particle. The eczema was something terrible, and the doctors said it was the worst case they ever saw. At times his whole body and face were covered, all but his feet. I had to bandage his limbs and arms; his scalp was just dreadful.

A friend teased me to try Cuticura, and I began to use all three of the Cuticura Remedies. He was better in two months; and in six months he was well. Mrs. R. L. Risley, Piermont, N. H., Oct. 24, 1905."

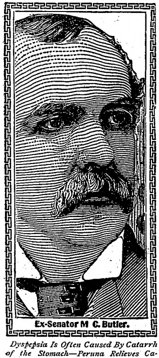
UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM SOUTH CAROLINA PRAISES PE-RU-NA.



Ex-Senator M C. Butler.

Dyspepsia Is Often Caused By Catarrh of the Stomach—Peruna Relieves Catarrh of the Stomach and Is Therefore a Remedy For Dyspepsia.

Hon. M. C. Butler, Ex-U. S Senator from South Carolina for two terms, in a letter from Washington, D. C., writes to the Peruna Medicine Co., as follows:

"I can recommend Peruna for dyspepsia and stomach trouble. I have been using your medicine for a short period and I feel very much relieved. It is indeed a wonderful medicine, besides a good tonic."

CATARRH of the stomach is the correct name for most cases of dyspepsia. In order to cure catarrh of the stomach the catarrh must be eradicated.

Only an internal catarrh remedy, such as Peruna, is available.

Peruna exactly meets the indications.

Revised Formula.

"For a number of years requests have come to me from a multitude of grateful friends, urging that Peruna be given a slight laxative quality. I have been experimenting with a laxative addition for quite a length of time, and now feel gratified to announce to the friends of Peruna that I have incorporated such a quality in the medicine which, in my opinion, can only enhance its well-known beneficial character.

A STUDY FROM LIFE

By LEIGH ATWOOD

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

It was my first "allowance," you see, that was why I thought so much about it. I know now it is impossible to make an allowance do, and nobody expects it either.

I was only ten pounds short at the end of the quarter; and, really, I hadn't been a bit extravagant, except perhaps for that lovely jeweled muff-chain, which cost—but there, that doesn't matter.

Dad scolded me a little, the old dear, and of course gave me some more money; but it seemed to me I ought to save it myself, yet somehow I couldn't.

However, one day all of a sudden I had a splendid idea. I would write a book! It looked so easy and paid so well, I knew, because Mr. Kingswell, dad's friend, wrote books for which he got heaps of money—thousands of pounds, somebody told me.

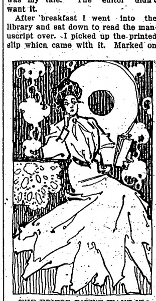
It proved to be very much more trouble than you would think. I had read somewhere that one ought to parse every word one writes. I didn't see why. Yet I did it, for of course an author must expect to put up with a little inconvenience; though I am afraid the parsing would have made dear old Miss Howard shudder, for I always hated parsing at school.

I soon gave up the idea of writing a book.

A tale would be quite enough and far less bother. So I burnt the other stuff, parsing and all, and started on the tale. It was easy to decide what it should be about. All the tales I've read have been about a girl, a man and a wedding. So I soon got it done. It was rather a rush to get it copied by post time, but I managed it and sent it off to the editor in whose paper I wished it to appear, and then waited for him to send me the check.

About two days later a big envelope came up with my letters and I couldn't think what it might be; but when I opened it I was indeed surprised. It was my tale. The editor didn't want it.

After breakfast I went into the library and sat down to read the manuscript over. I picked up the printed slip which came with it. Marked on it were two or three words about the tale having "no plot" and being "too crude." It was so absurd, because there was a plot. I know what a plot is. We studied the plots of Shakespeare at school. The plot is the tale, and my tale was about a man who met a girl and married her.



THE EDITOR DIDN'T WANT IT.

I was thinking this out when Mr. Kingswell was announced. After he had shaken hands he went and stood on the hearthrug with one elbow on the chimney piece, looking at me at the writing table surrounded by all my papers.

"Whatever documents have you there? Are you auditing the household accounts?" he asked.

"No," I said, "I don't have anything to do with the accounts yet; I don't think I could manage them." (Of course I couldn't. Hadn't I made a muddle of my own allowance?)

"Ah! Then you are perhaps calculating your personal liabilities? But, no, I see you are not dealing with figures."

He was laughing, I could tell; but I didn't mind that, some people laugh so nicely, and I determined to tell him all about it.

"I am writing a story," I said, "or rather I have written one, and, would you believe, the editor I posted it to has sent it back."

"It's a habit I am told editors have," Mr. Kingswell replied, quite seriously, though I fancied his eyes were laughing.

"It's a very silly habit," I asserted, "and editors must be very stupid if they are all like this one. Why he says there is no plot in my tale; could anything be more ridiculous?"

"What is the story? Tell me all about it," returned Mr. Kingswell, "and I shall be able to sympathize more completely."

So I told him briefly, of course, for there wasn't much to tell, and when I had finished:

"Indeed, Miss March," he said, "the editor must be mistaken. Given a man and a woman there's bound to be a tale. But let me read it. Perhaps you haven't worked it out properly. You are inexperienced, you know."

I gave him the manuscript and watched while he sat in dad's armchair to read it. He is what you would call a fine man, with such strong shoulders and lovely brown hair with little tips of gray, like silver dust, on it. I was just thinking how nice he looked sitting there, and what a firm nose and mouth he had, when suddenly he glanced up and said, abruptly: "So your hero is young and handsome—a real Apollo. You admire handsome men?"

"Oh, no," I said. "I admire strong men, not that sort at all. But I thought it was the usual thing in books."

I didn't say any more till the whole of the sheets had been read. It took some time, for I scribble awfully when I try to write fast. And then I asked him what he thought was the matter with it. I told him that the editor said it was too crude, and he agreed.

I was offended, and I expect he saw it, for he went on as quickly as possible to explain what he meant. He said a great deal, but as far as I can remember the meaning of it all was that I had had no experience of getting engaged and that sort of thing and that the tale showed this weakness. He said I had much to learn and before I corrected the story I ought to try to improve.

Did you ever hear anything so silly? How could I gain experience in a day or two? Who was there to help me?

I told Mr. Kingswell what I thought of his idea. Of course it would be useful, but impracticable.

I always knew he was a fine chum. I had known him for ever so many years, but I think he was just a trump for what he suggested. It was that he should be my lover for a fortnight, so that I might see how a man would act if he loved somebody. Since he didn't mind the trouble, I was of course perfectly willing, and soon after we had arranged it he left.

But no sooner had Mr. Kingswell gone than I began to feel wretched. It was about his last book. I read it. There was such a nice girl in it, about like me I should think. I wondered if she pretended to be his very dear friend while he wrote the book. It wasn't a nice idea somehow.

Next day Mr. Kingswell wrote me a little note asking me to go skating with him that afternoon on the lake. I went, and did enjoy myself immensely. He looked after me and talked so nicely that I was sorry when he had to go back to dinner. Dad was laughing when he met us in the hall. I didn't see why, for I hadn't told him about our plan, and I didn't seem to want to; but suddenly he kissed me and went off in a hurry, which I thought was rather funny of him.

I had always felt a wee bit jealous that Mr. Kingswell always came to see dad and not particularly me; but now when I knew his visits were really mine it was delightful. I had a lovely time and the days just flew by. The fortnight began to draw to the end. I counted the days as they passed. I couldn't help thinking how I should miss a lover. For he was a splendid actor; anyone would think he really meant it.

I remember once we went for a walk—dad, Mr. Kingswell and I—when one of those harum-scarum Graham boys dashed up on his bicycle just as we were crossing the road. I can't tell how it happened, but the next minute Mr. Kingswell was lifting me up all covered with road dust whilst dad was anxiously entreating me to tell him if I were hurt. I wasn't, and said so; and really it was a good thing dad had turned to speak to the boy, for it took my "lover" quite a long time to realize there was nothing the matter. He kept on holding me as if he would never let me go and I distinctly heard him murmur: "Thank God for that, my darling," when I said I was all right, exactly as if it really mattered to him.

At length the last day came and Mr. Kingswell did not appear till the evening after dinner. Dad had gone to his study; he wouldn't let me go with him, but said I had to amuse myself till he came back. I took my violin and tried to play—but couldn't, I was too lonely. So I just cuddled up on the big settle and tried not to cry. Some one came in. I thought it was dad until I looked up and saw—Mr. Kingswell.

He looked so stern, I wondered what was the matter till I remembered the fortnight was really over now, and of course he would go back to being just "dad's friend." I didn't know there was such a difference—I wished I had never learned. Everything seemed miserable now; and really our experiment would not be of much use, for I vowed I would never write about Mr. Kingswell in a book—I would just remember him myself.

Of course the right thing for me to do was to thank him for his kindness in helping me, but I was afraid to. He was looking at me so unmercifully, indeed, that I daren't try, especially as I knew my voice would be sure to shiver as if I had just been crying—and of course I hadn't. So I just waited and longed for dad to come in till at last he spoke.

"And so our acting is over, Marjory?"

It was the first time he had called me that, and I liked to hear it. I couldn't think of anything to say, and neither did he for a moment; then he said quite suddenly:

"You think me a good actor, don't you? Marjory—darling—it was real!"

I found my voice and gasped out: "Oh! I am so glad."

But I hadn't time for any more, for Mr. Kingswell was only a little way from me, and he takes such big strides!

AN EVERY-DAY STRUGGLE.

Men and Women of Every Occupation Suffer Miseries from Kidney Complaint.

J. C. Lightner, 703 South Cedar St., Abilene, Kansas, is one of the thousands who suffer from kidney troubles brought on by daily work. "I first noticed it eight or ten years ago," said Mr. Lightner, "the dull pain in the back fairly made me sick. It was hard to get up or down, hard to straighten; hard to do any work that brought a strain on the back. I had frequent attacks of gravel and the urine was passed too often and with pain. When I used Doan's Kidney Pills, however, all traces of the trouble disappeared and have not returned. I am certainly grateful."

KIDNEY TROUBLES

Increasing Among Women, But Sufferers Need Not Despair

THE BEST ADVICE IS FREE

Of all the diseases known, with which the female organism is afflicted, kidney disease is the most fatal, and statistics show that this disease is on the increase among women.

Mrs. Emma Sawyer

Unless early and correct treatment is applied the patient seldom survives when once the disease is fastened upon her. We believe Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the most efficient treatment for chronic kidney troubles of women, and is the only medicine especially prepared for this purpose.

When a woman is troubled with pain or weight in loins, backache, frequent, painful or scalding urination, swelling of limbs or feet, swelling under the eyes, an uneasy, tired feeling in the region of the kidneys or notices a sediment in the urine, she should lose no time in commencing treatment with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it may be the means of saving her life.

For proof, read what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Sawyer.

"I cannot express the terrible suffering I had to endure. A derangement of the female organs developed nervous prostration and a serious kidney trouble. The doctor attended me for a year, but I kept getting worse, until I was unable to do anything, and I made up my mind I could not live. I finally decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a last resort, and I am to-day a well woman. I cannot praise it too highly, and I tell every suffering woman about my case."—Mrs. Emma Sawyer, Conyers, Ga.

A Correction That Failed to Correct and Called Forth Comment Incorrect.

Capt. William Ellinger, the noted oyster grower of Chesapeake bay, said recently:

"The oyster business is in a bad way. Oysters are getting scarce. They are not planted in the right manner, and they are not gathered in the right manner. The government must soon step in and give us a change, or eventually there will be no oysters left. Things are all wrong as they are—as wrong as the English with the letter 'h.'

"Once, in Banbury, I dined with an English farmer. We had ham for dinner, a very delicious ham, baked. The farmer's son soon finished his portion and passed his plate again.

"'More 'am, father,' he said.

The farmer frowned.

"'Don't say 'am, son,' he said, 'say 'am.'

"'I did say 'am,' the lad protested, in an injured tone.

"'You said 'am,' cried the father, fiercely. ''Am's what is should be. 'Am, not 'am.'

"In the midst of the squabble the farmer's wife turned to me with a little deprecatory laugh and said:

"'They both think they're saying 'am.'"

Information Gathered from All Quarters of the Civilized World and Prepared for the Perusal of the Busy Man.

CONGRESSIONAL NEWS.

The coal mines bill, the object of which is to gradually reduce the hours of work till they reach the eight-hour limit in 1909, without reducing wages, was passed unanimously on second reading in the house of commons.

The house passed a resolution calling upon the state department for information as to the seizure of the American schooner Lizzie B. Evans by the republic of Mexico.

Free seeds were considered by the senate committee on agriculture. Representatives of seed houses and nurseries urged the committee to limit the free distribution to rare varieties of vegetables, grains, flowers and plants which are experimented with and propagated by the government.

The house committee on foreign affairs authorized a favorable report on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. The measure carries a total of $2,744,000.

Three hundred and twenty pension bills were passed by the house in one hour and a half. This record has never been equaled in the disposition of pension legislation.

STANDARD OIL PROBE.

Sensational disclosures involving the bribing of ministers of the gospel to spy on their parishioners and report to agents of the Standard Oil company what brand of oil was used by them were prepared for the interstate commerce commission at Chicago. That preachers by the score were on the pay roll of the trust was told at a preliminary hearing of witnesses.

Startling revelations of the Standard Oil company's alleged bribery of railroad employes in order to learn secrets of competitors' shipments were brought out before the interstate commerce commission at Chicago.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Conditions in the iron and steel industry have been greatly improved by three settlements of labor controversies that handicapped progress to some extent.

Failures for the week were 209 in the United States, against 197 the previous week, and 17 in Canada, compared with 21 a year ago.

The gunboat Marblehead sailed from San Francisco on a cruise to the southward as far as Pichilinque, Mexico, and perhaps farther, and lasting through the coming summer.

Acting Secretary of the Navy Newberry is dealing with severity with courts-martial that fall short of their duty in the exhibition of undue leniency toward culprits.

Mrs. Ruth Cantell, wife of Overseer Harry Eugene Cantell, died at Zion City in child-birth. No medical services were given the suffering woman, who expired in agony, surrounded by praying elders.

The eruption of Mount Vesuvius is diminishing. The ashes have now taken the direction of Pompeii and Ottajano, while some ashes have fallen at Somma.

The United States government secured an unconditional surrender in the United States circuit court, before Judge Sanborn, at St. Paul, in the suit which the attorney general began December 27, 1904, to dissolve a combination between the General Paper company and 23 other defendants on the ground that an agreement had been entered into by the defendants in restraint of interstate commerce.

Several hundred University of Missouri students engaged in a fight with show men from Cole Brothers circus at Columbia, Mo., Thursday, and as a result Maynard McDole, a freshman from Craig, Mo., was shot in the head and is in a critical condition and several others are slightly hurt.

Ignatius Batory, a Hungarian patriot and contemporary and friend of Louis Kossuth, died at Catonsville, Md., of the infirmities of age. He was born in 1818.

The extradition bill, covering the convention between the Balfour government and the United States for the inclusion of bribery among extraditable crimes, passed its second reading in the house of lords.

Gov. Pardee, of California, announced he would give five days' warning before discontinuing legal holidays.

Judge Wright at hearing at Belvidere, Ill., proposed to place management of Zion in hands of a committee of three.

Courtiers and spectators, other than members of the national parliament, led the cheering, when the czar delivered his speech, but the members were ominously silent, expressing neither approval nor disapproval. What rankled most was the failure of the emperor to mention amnesty.

Right Rev. James H. Blenk, bishop of Porto Rico, has been appointed archbishop of New Orleans, to fill the vacancy created by the death of Archbishop Chapelle.

Vice President Fairbanks was 54 years old May 11. He spent his time presiding over the senate in one of the busiest days of the session. He received many messages from friends throughout the country.

Charges of bribery and corruption made against James S. Gibson, county attorney at Kansas City, Kan., have been withdrawn. The evidence is insufficient.

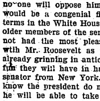
WASHINGTON GOSSIP

AFTER PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT LEAVES OFFICE IN 1909.

MAY MAKE WORLD TOUR.

President and His Associates in Their Fondness for Athletics—The American Soldier in San Francisco.



WASHINGTON.—Political prophets in Washington are trying to find a place for President Roosevelt after he goes out of office in 1909. One ingenious writer has predicted the election of Secretary of War Taft to the presidency, and declares that Theodore Roosevelt would be Mr. Taft's secretary of state. This arrangement has caused President Roosevelt considerable amusement and has excited the risibilities of men in public life generally.

The most frequently expressed opinion in political circles is that Mr. Roosevelt is more likely to come to the senate from New York than he is to fill any other position. Senator Platt's term will expire on March 3, 1909, the date on which Mr. Roosevelt will cease to be president of the United States. Mr. Platt is not a candidate for reelection, and if Mr. Roosevelt enters the field it is admitted that no one will oppose him. The senate would be a congenial field after two terms in the White House. Some of the older members of the senate who have not had the most pleasant relations wtih Mr. Roosevelt as president are already grinning in anticipation of the fun they will have in hazing the new senator from New York. Those who know the president do not doubt that he will be able to take good care of himself when the hazing begins.

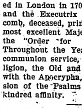
After Mr. Roosevelt retires from the presidency even though he is elected a senator from New York it is believed that his plans contemplate a tour of the world. He could start at once and do this tour before the beginning of the regular session of congress following. It is admitted that no one, not even Grant, has received greater honors than would be accorded to Mr. Roosevelt by all the great foreign nations he would visit. His reputation as the great peacemaker of the world would insure him a triumphal tour.

Martha Washington's Bible.

THERE was recently restored to its rightful owner one of the most interesting relics of colonial and revolutionary times. The long lost Bible of Martha Washington, which was taken from the home of the Lee family at Arlington during the civil war was a few days ago restored by G. W. Kendricks, of Philadelphia, to Miss Mary Custis Lee, daughter of Gen. Robert E. Lee, the commander of the confederacy. The wanderings of this old volume will never be known. Mr. Kendricks, who is a book collector, bought the Bible many years ago from a man named Stein. It was probably stolen, as were many other treasures from the Lee mansion, by the servants and soldiers, and pawned for a trifling sum by persons ignorant of its value.

The book has been kept with great care and is in fine condition. Its black leather cover shows few scratches. A few pages are torn, but the ink is still unfaded, and many leaves and flowers pressed by members of the Lee family are still in it. The Bible was printed in London in 1702 by "Charles Bill and the Executrix of Thomas Newcomb, deceased, printers to the King's most excellent Majesty." It contains the "Order for Morning Prayer Throughout the Year," including the communion service, the articles of religion, the Old and New Testaments, with the Apocrypha, the metrical version of the Psalms and the table of kindred affinity.

Good Athletes.



IN PRESIDENT Roosevelt's cabinet there are several men who can hold him level in certain lines of athletics, although the president has the reputation of being the greatest all-round athlete among public men in Washington. He does not boast of particular skill in any sport except wrestling. In that he has quite a record. He is a very good rider, a good boxer, a fairly good shot, and a very fair tennis player. He gets most of his exercise, however, in wrestling and boxing, and if he cannot persuade any of his friends to stand up against him he will have some athletic instructor come to the White House and try a few rounds with him with the gloves.

Two of his cabinet have fine athletic records. They are Attorney General Moody and Secretary of Commerce and Labor Metcalf. Moody is one of the most enthusiastic baseball cranks in the country. When he was at college he was a crack player himself. He was captain of the Andover baseball team in 1872, and played with the 'Varsity nine at Harvard for four years. If he gets the oportunity he still likes to play the game, but just now he takes most of his exercise in horseback riding.

Secretary Metcalf made quite a record as an oarsman on the Yale crew away back in 1875-6. When he went to California in 1880 he became a member of the Olympic club, of San Francisco. He was one of the crack boxers of the club, and at one time held the middleweight amateur championship of San Francisco for wrestling. He does not indulge in any of this violent exercise now, as he has not been in good health for some time, and he, like Moody, confines himself to riding and walking. First Assistant Postmaster General Hitchcock is one of the greatest athletes in public life. He has a fine record as a baseball player, but his specialty is boxing.

Confidence Restored.

THE United States army has won new laurels by the part it has played in San Fransisco. The authorities at the war department, however, are of the opinion that it has about completed its work there. Secretary Taft is opposed to the policy of retaining any number of troops in San Francisco engaged in the work of relief and restoration. He believes that these duties should be taken up by the citizens of San Francisco themselves. The longer the army stays there the more danger there is of conflict of authority between the municipal officials and the officers of the army. It is also felt that the people of San Francisco would be much more self-respecting if they are shouldered with the responsibility of maintaining order and relieving the suffering.

The conduct of the army officers and men in the great disaster in San Francisco has done much to restore to the army the confidence and respect of the people, and particularly of members of congress. It had become the habit of some congressmen and senators on all occasions to decry the American soldier. When the news came of the wiping out of the Moros at Mount Dajo in the Philippines there was a renewal of the criticism of the army and an outcry against the brutality and cruelty of the soldiers. This has all been hushed. When the same soldier, because those stationed on the Pacific coast are of the same army that has occupied the Philippines, went into the burning city, rescued men, women and children, went hungry that others might eat, and neither slept nor rested night nor day there was nothing heard about the brutal soldiers.

A New Fertilizer.

SECRETARY WILSON'S department of agriculture is constantly discovering something that is destined to be of benefit to the farmer. Just now the scientists in that department are somewhat excited over the supposed discovery of a new supply of fertilizer which can be furnished cheaper than the same material has ever been before secured. Heretofore the whole supply of carbonate of potash fertilizer has come from Germany, but Dr. Cushman, of the roads' office in the agricultural department, believes that he has found something in this country that will completely supplant the German fertilizer.

Last summer when Dr. Cushman was experimenting on some granite road material in his laboratory he extracted from some very finely powdered rock a large percentage of potash. He extracted this potash by electricity, but he concluded that as ground rock is very cheap, it might be worth while to try the experiment of letting the plants do their own extracting. He tried it on his own farm, and found that the powdered rock did actually act as a fertilizer.

The commercial value of imported fertilizer is about $100 a ton. It is necessary in the tobacco fields and a number of other crops require it. The ground rock, on the other hand, can be produced for about three dollars a ton, and there is so much of it in the country that runs high in potash, and is available for use that the supply could never be cornered.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Railroad Report.

Minneapolis.—The annual report of the state railroad and warehouse commission for the year ending June 30, 1905, was made public yesterday. The report shows 7,791.85 miles of track in the state. This does not include local transfer lines, union depot tracks and private logging roads. The increase in mileage over the previous year is 324.64. Of this amount the Soo line has built 181 miles; the Duluth, Missabe & Northern, 11 miles; Great Northern, 44.16; Northern Pacific, 5 miles; logging roads added to list of common carriers, 105 miles.

The total gross earnings for the year ending June 30, 1905, were $70,827,344, and for the previous year, $63,275,702. The operating expenses were $35,664,321, and for the previous year $33,209,742. This leaves a net income of $35,163,023 for the year. For the previous year, $30,065,960.

The accident reports show 204 people killed in accidents during the year and 1,454 injured.

Will Plant Forest.

St. Paul.—Gen. C. C. Andrews and Prof. S. B. Green of the Minnesota state forestry board returned from the Pillsbury forest reserve in Cass county, where they started the planting of the 20,000 two-year-old white pine seedlings imported from Germany. With these there will be planted in alternate rows about the same number of Norway spruce seedlings which have been grown by the forestry board in its nursery on the reserve. This being the first planting by the forestry board, careful account will be kept of the expense.

The board has in its nursery on the Pillsbury reserve about 700,000 two-year-old Norway spruce seedlings growing in good condition, which were raised from seed, and the board hopes to plant them on the reserve this year. The legislature appropriated no money for this purpose and the planting they do this year is done with money they have saved from the general expense fund.

Cattle Sales.

Hamline.—President C. N. Cosgrove and Secretary E. W. Randall of the state fair returned from Chicago, where they arranged for two sales of pure-bred cattle in addition to the Shorthorn sales already announced. The two sales are to be of Herefords and Aberdeen-Angus breeds, and they will be conducted by W. C. McGavock of Springfield, Ill. The Shorthorn sale will be under the management of the American Shorthorn Breeders' association.

The program of sales will be: Tuesday, Sept. 4, sale of fifty head of Aberdeen-Angus cattle; Wednesday, Sept. 5, sale of fifty head of Hereford cattle; Thursday, Sept. 6, sale of fifty head of Shorthorn cattle.

The sales will be in the new ampitheater, which will be dedicated by James J. Hill on Monday, Sept. 3, the opening day of the fair.

Close Call.

St. Cloud.—On his way from Bemidji to Texas, William Miles of Bemidji, attempted to commit suicide on a Northern Pacific passenger train, between Little Falls and this city. The man at midnight was still conscious in a local hospital and though physicians entertain hope of his recovery, his condition is serious. No cause is known for the deed.

Laudanum was taken by Miles. A brakeman found him prostrate and finding the empty bottle of the poison near the man took prompt steps to restore him. This timely aid probably saved Miles' life.

Loses Life for Hat.

Ely.—Peter Olson was instantly killed at the hoist on the Swallow & Hopkins railroad between Fall lake and Basswood.

Olson was section foreman for the Swallow & Hopkins company, and was riding on a flatcar at the rear end of the train, which was backing up. His hat was blown off, and in leaning over to watch where it went he lost his balance. Both his feet were cut off, and he was badly crushed in the chest.

He was about fifty years of age and leaves a family.

More Trouble.

Minneapolis.—Owing to another change made by the revised statutes, alias the "new code," the state forestry board has lost control of a balance of $4,000, saved for several years, which it intended to use this season in paying labor for setting out seedling trees on the Pillsbury state reserve. There are 700,000 seedling spruce trees, two years old, which ought to be set out at proper distances to form a new growth, but the board has not the money to pay for the work.

News Notes.

Duluth.—Marine business is becoming very quiet in the Duluth-Superior harbor since the fleet that was bound up light is now pretty well disposed of. Most of these boats have arrived since the strike and taken their cargoes and will not return until they have discharged them.

The project of a new bridge across the river was given impetus by the meeting of the commission of military officers appointed by the federal government to investigate and report on a site for the new structure.

Brainerd.—The crew which has been working at Gull lake collecting pike spawn has closed its operations and reports a successful season. Thirty million eggs are said to have been taken

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1,50

Judging from the editorial colums of the St. Hilaire Spectator H.E. Ives is on his wedding trip.

We are to have a new editor in Red Lake County, from Iowa. Treat him kindly gentlemen and do not play the school boy act to make him fight the first day, just to see what he is made of.

If you took your homestead for speculation, it is useless to pay out good money for ditching or improvements. Prove it up and let the other fellow do the improveing of the country and raise the price of it.

The twin city papers are trying to create the impression that there is not sufficent hotel accomidation for the delegates to the republican convention June 13th, at Duluth. Perhaps it would be a good idea for them to leave some of their political pap suckers at home on that date, as their room might be more apreaciated than their company.

The pushers for Jacobson for the govberratorol nomination are about the only ones that have indulged in much mud throwing up to the present time, and they had better stop and consider that there will be a time after the convention when the nominee of the party will need all the strength and confidence of all the republicans if he expects to defeat Johnson.

Brooks is to have a newspaper and the Plummer Pioneer has got it tabed as a Red Lake Falls county seat removal paper, but then Chas. might get mistaken, as he did about a year ago when we put the SUNBEAM in here, at that time he promptly taged us as a Red Lake Falls scheam on county seat removel, and Red Lake Falls is still right over THERE and we are right over here, at Sunbeam.

E.A. Nelson, editor of the Hallock News, who was in attendance at the meeting of the editorial association here last week is a candidate for the Republican nomination for secretary of state.

Mr. Nelson met a number of people while here and made a very favorable impression. He is a decidedly bright young man and many here would be pleased to see him win.—Thief River Falls News.

It is tiresome to publish a news item that you know is authatic and in a few days have some one tell you that he heard that it was different. Two weeks ago we notified the settlers on this reservation that congress had granted them one years extension of time. We recieved our information direct from Washington and know that it is reliable.

When any one tells you that this is not a fact, tell him he is not up to date and had better subscribe for THE SUNBEAM.

So far as the Ninth district delegates are concerned, there isn't going to be any second choice. But if there were, it would never be Jacobson. Of all the candidates, Jacobson is the only one who has persistently fought state drainage from the time the question was first agitated up to the present moment, and he is the last man that any Northern Minnesota delegates would vote for.—Crookston Times.

We don't know about that Mack, as things are begining to look a little queer to a man up a tree in the northern part of the state, and The Times does not speak for the whole ninth District by a jug full.

Too Much to Ask.

A traveler in the highlands observed while at a tavern in a small village a very beautiful collie. At his request the owner was pointed out to him, and he asked the man what he would take for the dog.

"Ye'll be taking him to America?" the Scot asked cautiously.

"Certainly, if you sell him to me."

"I no coul' part wie Rob," the dog's owner then said emphatically, "I'm muckle fond-like o' him." And liberal offers were no inducement.

To his astonishment, the traveler later saw the dog sold to a drover for half what he had offered and after the drover had disappeared requested an explanation. "You said that you could not sell him," he remarked.

A twinkle came into the highlander's eyes.

"No; I didna say I'd no sell him. I said I couldna part wie him," he said. "Rob'll be hame in two or three days fra noo, but I couldna ask him to swim across the ocean. Na; that woul' be too muckle to ask."—Harper's Weekly

Pews That Carry a Vote.

The parish church of Chertsey possesses a curious anomaly. It has several pews in its gallery which are bought and sold by auction, just like a table or a chair, and these pews give their owners for the time being a legal right to vote at parliamentary elections in the division. Moreover, the owners of the pews have to pay the poor rate of £2 a year into the bargain, a privilege they are not so eager to use as the former one. Many years ago the churchwardens of Chertsey were at their wits' end in order to raise money for the restoration and repair of the sacred edifice, and they could find no solution to the question until some parishioners suggested that they should sell the gallery pews to the highest bidder. They accepted the idea and obtained a special act of parliament allowing them to do this and also giving the privilege of a parliamentary vote.—London Spectator.

A Gallery of Forgeries.

Paris possesses a very fine gallery of modern masters, largely of the Barbizon school, not one of which is genuine. It is to the painter Harpignies that France is indebted for this queer collection of the spurious. Passing through the Rue de Vaugirard one day, his eye caught some canvases in a window. They were all signed by prominent names, including his own, and every signature was forged. Passing inside, the list became more extensive, and the painter found himself in the presence of false Corots, Diazes, Daubignys, Lancrets, Isabeys, Neuvilles and even English Turners. The revelation of his own identity enabled Harpignies to become possessed of this collection for something less than the proverbial old song, and it may now be inspected by those interested in such matters at the state furniture depot, where it is preserved as a kind of high water mark in sophistication.

Nose Drinking In Norway.

The Norwegian papers tell of a speedy and efficacious method of becoming intoxicated prevailing in the slums of Christiania. The Orebladet describes how it is done. The drunkard fills the palm of his hand with "aquevit" (strong corn brandy) and sniffs it through his nose. A few applications do the work, while the same quantity of liquor taken into the stomach would hardly be felt. "Nose drinking" has become a real vice with some individuals. The effect of it is terrible, because the whole nervous system is paralyzed in a moment, and the drunkard remains almost unconscious for several minutes. Afterward a sleepy fatigue is felt, as after smoking opium.

Not an Arrest, but a Rescue.

"You were arrested for striking your wife."

"No, judge," answered the unworthy specimen of manhood who was on trial; "I had made a pass at her, and she was just reachin' for the stove lid when the officers came and took me in charge. That wasn't an arrest. That was a rescue."—Washington Star.

Satisfactorily Defined.

Willie—Pa, what is the meaning of the expression "touch and go?" Papa—It's very simple, my son. It means extreme speed and refers to the professional borrowers, who make a touch and go so fast you seldom see them again.

Men With Hearts.

"I don't believe bachelors have any hearts," she said.

"Why, we're just the men who do have them," he replied.

"Why is that?" she asked.

"Because we haven't lost them."

Relief From Ennui.

"Don't you ever get tired of doing nothing?" asked one.

"Oh, yes," replied the other languidly.

"Well, what do you do then?"

"Take a rest."

Industry keeps the body healthy, the mind clear, the heart whole and the purse full.—Simmons.

Come and see us when yon are ready to preve up on your land.

Alfred Evo is transacting business at Thief River Falls this week.

The Dan Patch freight boat is making regular trips now, from The Falls to Little Oak.

Bring your wocl to the Singer store and they will pay you the highest market price for it.

John Wentzek and Mike Kolski, of Rodny made this office a pleasant call Wednesday evening.

Julius Halverson was a passengar on the Red Lake Flyer boat last Friday to Thief River Falls.

Wallace Grace commenced the building of our new school house Monday and expects to have it completed by July 1st.

B. Paterson the Highlanding blacksmith seems to have about all the work he can attend to now days repairing breaking plows,

Rev. E.A. Mostue will hold religious services in the english language at the Rhoda school house on May 27th, at 11 o'clock a.m.

There is some talk of the settlers getting up a monster picnic for the 4th of July at some central point on the Red Lake River.

The Thief River Falls Milling Company presents you with an invertation to deal with them in an other colum. We can say from useing it that Vivo flour is O.K.

The rain of yesterday will delay seeding operations for some time, as it was a soaker, most al of the small grain is sown on all lands that were broken last season.

Farmers, who are going to do fencing this spring should call on E. B. Laneger, at Plummer Pioneer Hardware Store, for al kinds of fencing. Will make prices right.

The Grand Forks drive passed here Monday evening, in charge of Paddy Sullivan, who was working a night shift of drivers and keeping the logs moveing night and day,

The seats for the new Rhoda school house arrived by boat Tuesday and were taken out and placed in position Wednesday, so the school children in that district will have up to date seats.

—If you are running a small country store and post office, it is a good plan to keep a vicious dog so you will not be bothered with people coming to visit you. If you have not one of your own borrow one.

Judging from the present outlook, there has not been any newly settled part of Minnesota that is going to develop us rapidly on the 11 towns, as the people up this way are hustlers from hustlervill,

Stephen Singer left Tuesday for Red Lake Agency on the big Red Lake steam boat accomponied with forty cases of eggs, where he has a contract to furnish the Beltrami Lumber Co. with their spring supplies.

Sunbeam landing is getting to be quite an unloading point for supplies, and we would like to have any one shipping goods here to notify us by postal card, as there is a large pile of stuff being unloaded here that we never heard of the partys that they are directed to.

John Wetzink alias John Lott has shipped a large number of fruit trees to be set out on his Deer Park farm this spring.

We are pleased to note that P.A. Rustad is moveing for good from the town of Garnes and will become a perminent resident of the town of Highlanding.

A meeting will be held at Radny P.O. Saturday May 19 1906 at 1 o'clock p.m. for the subscribers of the Clearwater Bridge, to be there and accept the final report of Bridge committee

The last load of lumber went up on the big steam boat Tuesday for the Clearwater creamery and agent Smith informes us that he is rushing operations as fast as possible to complete the building,

Owing to the development of a strange sentiment against bonding the township, to buy ditchers and road graders at the last Tuesdays election, it is doubtful if there will be anything in that line bought by the town this season.

P C. Wold our popular assessor is becoming to be recogenized as the watch dog of the treasurey of the school district and Township, and while he may at times be a little severe, such men as him are needed in every new township.

The directors of the Red Lake River Transportation Company will meet at Sunbeam on next Sunday after noon and the first general meeting of all share holders will be held at Sunbeam on May 20th at 1 o'clock p.m. and a meeting of the board of Directors will be held at the same place at 8 o'clock p.m. all share holders and others interested in getting a line of boats on this river that will be run in the interest of the people living on this reservation are requested to be present.

DEER PARK.

Adolph Grundeson, our school teacher here, was called down to Fisher, last Saturday, to see his sister that was very low and was not expected to live.

The Plummer Pioneer, must be rather "shy" on type pickers as the local news matter from outside parts, which is contributed, comes under the heading of special rates, And sample copies of the Pioneer, are barred from Deer Park.

George Singer is the all around man at Rhoda this week, he does it all, but the cooking.

Miss Ellen Swanson who for some time passed, has been staying with Mrs. W.A. Swanson left for her home in Garness last Saturday.

Mr. Singer traded away all his sheep last week, for a fine cow.

Rev. Mostue, left for Gully, last week.

Rev. Mostue, will hold religous servises in the Deer Park school house on Sunday May 27th at 11 o'clock and every body come.

Benny Rustad and M,E. Hyland, went over to Garnes last Saturday, to bring Mr. Rustad's cattle back with them which will be taken over to the north side of Red Lake river on Mr. Rustad's new place.

C.O. Lundberg captured another wolf last week, in a trap, this makes it his second one.

T.G. Rome, from Grit has been up this way on a visit, and is also looking over some vacant land, we hope he will find a piece that suits.

C.O. Swanson is now ready to move into his new house, on the homestead.

"English as She Is Spoke."

Dunley—Do you take your breakfast downtown? Quibble—Yes, but I eat it [illegible]

COMMISSIONERS MEET.

A special meeting of the Commissioners will be held May 29th to consider petitions for the formation of new school districts on the reservation.

All parties desiring to organize new school districts should have their petitions sent in before the above date. The new law requires the names and ages on the petitions, of the children of school age. Blanks may be obtained from James E. Ford county auditor, Red Lake Falls.

New districts which have one or more months of school before July 31, will draw apportiment for each pupil who attends one or more days that is for each pupil enrolled. The apportiment will be nearly $5 for each pupil.

The Reason.

He—Why is genius so often misunderstood?

She—Probably it's because genius so frequently fails to talk plainly.

His Limitations.

He may be all right to face the powder, but when he kisses a lady the color leaves his face.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Lynch Law.

In an article in Law Notes on "The Origin of the Term 'Lynch Law'" mention was made of the fact that formerly the term "Lydford law" was used in the same sense in England. A North Carolina judge in a recent case quoted the following lines:

I oft have heard of Lydford law—
How in the morn they hang and draw
And sit in judgment after.

They seem to show the existence of a similar summary punishment in England.

Unconscious Sarcasm.

A Scotch visitor to the Carlyles, in Cheyne row, was much struck with the sound proof room which the sage had contrived for himself in the attic, lighted from the top, and where no sight or sound from outside could penetrate. "My certes, this is fine!" cried the old friend, with unconscious sarcasm. "Here ye may write and study all the rest of your life and no human being be one bit the wiser."

Joining the Hunt.

Mrs. Impecunious—Here's a man suing for divorce because his wife goes through his pockets. What would you do, John, dear, if you woke up tonight and found me at your pockets? Mr. Impecunious—Get up and help you look.—Woman's Home Companion.

Incarnate Umbrellas.

We English, of course, get what we call hardened to horrible climatic changes. Nevertheless I am convinced that our solemnity of demeanor is generated by our gray skies, our piercing east winds, our heavy, yellow fogs and our slushy roads and pavements. The waterproof face is the direct result of a firmament of lead. Many of us English people look like incarnate umbrellas.—London Queen.

Indispensability.

"No," said a lecturer, "it doesn't do to get swelled head and think you're indispensable to the welfare of this world.

"I was in the lobby of a big hotel in Cincinnati when a bus load of traveling salesmen came from the station. Every man of them as he signed the register paused to shake hands with the hotel clerk, a fatherly old fellow who had been there many years.

"'Ah,' said one of them to the clerk, 'it's a good thing you're still on deck Uncle Dave. I don't think the house could run without you.'

"'Couldn't it, just!' said Uncle Dave 'You fellows would come in here, and if there was a strange clerk you'd say "Where's Uncle Dave?"

"'And the clerk would say: "Why didn't you hear? He died a month ago."

"'And then you'd say: "Well, I'll be darned! That's too bad. Say, when'll dinner be ready?"'"

Shortsighted Animals.

So far as naturalists have been able to ascertain there is no such thing as shortsight among animals in a state of nature. In the case, however, of domestic animals and wild ones in confinement shortsight is by no means unknown. Many people who have kept dogs and cats will remember instances of pets which were unable to distinguish friends from strangers at a short distance. Horses, too, frequently suffer from shortsight and other derangements of the vision, and this kind of thing is sometimes met with in the case of cattle. The diseases of the eye which frequently affect wild animals in captivity are to be chiefly attributed to the narrow space in which they are confined. The eyes are never exercised upon distant objects and therefore lose the powers which use of this kind calls

A Pessimist.

"Don't be too anxious to get a husband," said the wise matron. "Don't go around hunting for one."

"Think I should just sit down and wait for one, eh?" replied the maiden.

"Yes, for you'll sit up and wait for one often enough after you've got him."

Quite Natural.

His Own Business.

This anecdote was told by John Graham Brooks: "One of the brightest replies I ever heard came from a lad in my neighborhood, who was being quizzed about his father's accomplishments, and was asked: 'What does your father know, anyway?' There was no hesitation in the answer: 'I don't believe he knows much of anything except his own business; but he knows that.'"

He Lived for Something.

The successful man is not the idler, the good fellow or the miser. He has accomplished something. He has an aim in life and he is helping others to reach their goal. PROVIDE CLEAN FEED LOT.

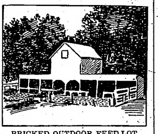
One Farmer Who Has Tried It Recommends That It Be Paved with Brick.

What is the best plan of arrangement and construction for a cattle feeding yard that shall be convenient and sanitary seems to remain an open question. Some have advocated brick floors, while others will have nothing to do with them. The only consensus of opinion there seems to be on the subject is that it is almost impossible to keep the feeding yard clean and sanitary. There is little doubt that muddy feed lots are one of the most important questions which must be dealt with by the stock raiser, and in this connection it may be advantageous to consider the plan of an Illinois feeder as described in a recent bulletin of the Illinois station.



BRICKED OUTDOOR FEED LOT.

The illustration represents the feed lot and shelter of Hon. E. E. Chester, of Champaign county. This pavement has been in use two years. It is 24 by 80 feet. The bricks were laid flat on six inches of gravel, the latter being packed by tramping with horses until a solid surface was secured. Brick costing eight dollars per thousand were used, and a cement wash was applied after the bricks were laid. No setting or cracking has yet been observed. The labor was done by the regular farm help. The curbing consists of curbstones 18 inches in width and three inches in thickness, set edgewise into the ground. The feed-bunks are placed inside the shed, as shown in the cut.

The yards and shelter are designed to accommodate about 50 cattle. In dry weather the cattle remain in the larger yard a considerable portion of the time. The advantage of the pavement is chiefly in giving the cattle easy access to water and shelter. "A steer will generally eat pretty well, even standing in the mud," says Mr. Chester, "but my experience has been that a fat steer will take less water than he needs if he must work to get to it, and will not take proper advantage of shelter unless it is where he can reach it easily. There is no question in my mind of the wisdom of paving the area adjacent to water and shelter in a muddy locality."

The shelter consists of a building 20 by 26 feet, 20-foot posts, with two wings, each 20 by 30 feet. The portion used as cattle-shelter is thus 20 by 80 feet. On the upper floor of the middle portion is stored dry corn-fodder run through an ensilage cutter. This is fed into the bunks below, through an open shaft at the front of the bin. Another bin 10 by 20 feet occupies the lower floor of the main building, and corn can thus be stored a few steps from the feed bunks so as to be fed easily by basket if desired.

DAIRY HINTS.

The milking machine promises to become quite a factor before long.

A good cow is worth more money than she brings in the market.

Good breeding and good feeding will give an average weight of 1,000 pounds to a calf at 12 to 14 months old.

The dairy business cannot be learned in one day, one month, or one year. There are things we must practice before we can learn them.

For removing warts on a cow's teats a Me. reader says to apply sweet oil two or three times daily, rubbing it in well, and the warts will soon disappear.

A poor cow or calf can often be made to come up to the standard of the herd by a little extra care and attention at the beginning of the grass season.

To Clean Mold-Board of Plow.

Sometimes the moldboard of the plow will not "scour" when it is first put into the ground, even if it was cleaned off nicely after it was used last. Take a little coarse gravel, a bit of an old bran sack, and scrub the moldboard well before starting out. This will take off the least bit of rust and help the steel to turn.—Farm Journal.

Weather Affects Milk Flow.

I have found that the weather has a lot to do with the flow of milk. Before a storm, my cows stop the flow of milk. As a barometer they cannot be surpassed. As soon as the storm comes the milk comes. Sometimes the storm may pass over; but it acts all the same.

Avoid Too Early Pasturage.

Keep the beef calves upon dry feed for some time in the spring until the grass gets large and sweet. It does not pay to turn upon grass too early, as there is not much strength in early grass.

BOY'S HEAD ONE SOLID SORE.

Hair All Came Out—Under Doctor Three Months and No Better—Cuticura Remedies Works Wonders.

Mr. A. C. Barnett, proprietor of a general store in Avard, Oklahoma, tells in the following grateful letter how Cuticura cured his son of a terrible eczema. "My little boy had eczema. His head was one solid sore, all over his scalp; his hair all came out, and he suffered very much. I had a physician treat him, but at the end of three months he was no better. I remembered that the Cuticura Remedies had cured me, and after giving him two bottles of Cuticura Resolvent, according to directions, and using Cuticura Soap and Ointment on him daily, his eczema left him, his hair grew again, and he has never had any eczema since. We use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and they keep our skin soft and healthy. I cheerfully recommend the Cuticura Remedies for all cases of eczema. A. C. Barnett, Mar. 30. 1905."

PHONETIC PHENOMENON.

How the "O" Came to Be Left Out in the Modernized Spelling of "Phenix."

They were talking about spelling reform and the idiosyncrasies of English spelling in general, relates Success Magazine.

"There's that very word 'phonetic,' said one of the men; "that's a sample of English spelling. The reformers call their system the 'phonetic system,' and yet they have to spell 'phonetic' with a 'pho' in order to let people know what they mean. The very word that means 'spelled as pronounced' is as far from it as possible."

"Now, now!" drawled his friend, "you're too hard on the good old English speller. You ought to be proud of 'phonetic.' Why, that word is so trimmed down, and sawed off, and cut short, that I wouldn't know it was English if I met it alone on a blank page. You ought to thank the language for the word. It is a beautiful word. That 'pho' might have been spelled like 'dough' and the 'net' like 'ette' in 'rosette,' and the 'ic' like the 'liq' in 'liquor.' That would be a good old-style English word—phoughnetteiq. But it is coming! Phonetic spelling is coming! Look at that word 'phenix.' It is spelled 'phenix' everywhere now, and I remember it always used to be 'phoenix.' The 'o' has gone. That shows—"

"Nothing!" said the objector. "What does it show? That the phenix is a bird. Isn't the phenix a bird? Yes! Well, that round thing you say was an 'o' was an egg. That's all. 'Twas just an egg, and the phenix laid the egg. That's all."

One on the Doctors.

The Boston Herald tells a story of a physician of Salem, Mass., who, talking to a group of friends, said: "I wanted to be a soldier, but my parents persuaded me to study medicine."

"Oh, well," rejoined one of the party, "such is life. Many a man with wholesale aspirations has to content himself with a retail business."

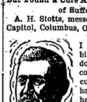
WASTED TO A SHADOW.

But Found a Cure After Fifteen Years of Suffering.

A. H. Stotts, messenger at the State Capitol, Columbus, O., says:



"For fifteen years I had kidney troubles, and though I doctored faithfully, could not find a cure. I had heavy backaches, dizzy headaches and terrible urinary disorders. One day I collapsed, fell insensible on the sidewalk, and then wasted away in bed for ten weeks. After being given up, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. In a couple of months I regained my old health, and now weigh 188 pounds. Twelve boxes did it, and I have been well two years."

Don't Poison Baby.

FORTY YEARS AGO almost every mother thought her child must have PAREGORIC or laudanum to make it sleep. These drugs will produce sleep, and A FEW DROPS TOO MANY will produce the SLEEP FROM WHICH THERE IS NO WAKING. Many are the children who have been killed or whose health has been ruined for life by paregoric, laudanum and morphine, each of which is a narcotic product of opium. Druggists are prohibited from selling either of the narcotics named to children at all, or to anybody without labelling them "poison." The definition of "narcotic" is: "A medicine which relieves pain and produces sleep, but which in poisonous doses produces stupor, coma, convulsions and death." The taste and smell of medicines containing opium are disguised, and sold under the names of "Drops," "Cordials," "Soothing Syrups," etc. You should not permit any medicine to be given to your children without you or your physician know of what it is composed. CASTORIA DOES NOT CONTAIN NARCOTICS, if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. Alexander E. Mintie, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "I have frequently prescribed your Castoria and have found it a reliable and pleasant remedy for children."

Dr. J. S. Alexander, of Omaha, Neb., says: "A medicine so valuable and beneficial for children as your Castoria is, deserves the highest praise. I had it in use everywhere."

Dr. J. A. McClellan, of Buffalo, N. Y., says: "I have frequently prescribed your Castoria for children and always got good results. In fact I use Castoria for my own children."

Dr. J. W. Allen, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I heartily endorse your Castoria. I have frequently prescribed it in my medical practice, and have always found it to do all that is claimed for it."

Dr. C. H. Glidden, of St. Paul, Minn., says: "My experience as a practitioner with your Castoria has been highly satisfactory, and I consider it an excellent remedy for the young."

Dr. H. D. Benner, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have used your Castoria as a purgative in the cases of children for years past with the most happy effect, and fully endorse it as a safe remedy."

Dr. J. A. Boarman, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria is a splendid remedy for children, known the world over. I use it in my practice and have no hesitancy in recommending it for the complaints of infants and children."

Dr. J. J. Mackey, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I consider your Castoria an excellent preparation for children, being composed of reliable medicines and pleasant to the taste. A good remedy for all disturbances of the digestive organs."

CONGRESSIONAL NEWS.

After 70 days of almost continuous deliberation the senate passed the railroad rate bill by the practically unanimous vote of 71 to 3. The three negative votes were cast by Senators Foraker, Republican, of Ohio, and Morgan and Pettus, Democrats, Alabama. The principal purpose of the bill is to permit the interstate commerce commission to fix rates.

The legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill reported to the senate aggregates $29,755,914, an increase of $445,721 over the amount as it passed the house.

The house committee on merchant marine and fisheries authorized a favorable report on the Morrell bill to prohibit shanghaiing.

Senators Tillman, Knox and Foraker united in declaring that the railroad rate bill would be unconstitutional if the clause were inserted granting to the interstate commerce commission discretion in the power of prescribing rates.

After two weeks' debate, the house passed the naval appropriation bill, carrying $99,764,000.

The senate committee on Panama canal was influenced in recommending sea-level type by Frisco earthquake.

Congressman Hepburn in speaking on the naturalization bill said present methods are a farce, the courts regarding the law as a farce.

Senator Tillman in the senate took issue with the president in the Chandler controversy, declaring that he felt under obligations to defend ex-Senator Chandler and place him right on the record. Mr. Tillman refuted the statement made by the president that he did not send for Mr. Chandler. Mr. Tillman said the letter from Mr. Loeb to Mr. Chandler invited the latter to visit the president.

The house committee on insular affairs authorized a favorable report on a bill authorizing the leasing of the military reservation on the Island of Batan, one of the Philippine group, for coal mining purposes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The worst forest fires since 1894 are devastating 200 square miles of territory in the northern peninsula of Michigan. Eight towns and villages have been wiped out and many others are in peril.

Fire, which started from a spark from the Northwestern mill, destroyed 100 residences and a dozen business buildings at Stanley, Wis. The loss is estimated at $200,000.

With but few exceptions every witness on the stand before the interstate commerce commission at Philadelphia revealed facts concerning the close connection between railroad men and mine owners, and how the latter for no apparent reason gave railroad men valuable blocks of stocks. In few instances did any money change hands in these transactions, the mine owners simply bringing the stock into the office of the railroad.

The pope has selected a magnificent triptych, by a German painter of the seventeenth century, as a wedding present for King Alfonso.

St. Paul—Annabel Lee, who, it is claimed by the police, has a reputation throughout the country, is under arrest at the central station. She is accused of passing forged checks at local stores.

St. Paul—The Great Northern shop employees will hold their annual picnic this year on June 23 at Spicer, on the shores of Green Lake. It is expected there will be two trainloads of excursionists.

Floodwood—A crew of civil engineers has been busy a week or more in this vicinity making drainage surveys for the state. It is reported that $6,000 will be spent for draining in the Floodwood district.

St. Paul—George Hasenzahl, a driver for the D. Bergman hide company, 186 East Third street, collided with an east-bound Selby avenue car while driving down West Fourth street, and was severely injured.

St. Peter—As part of a plan to establish [illegible] colony in northern Minnesota, several ministers of that denomination have organized the Northwestern Land & Immigration company.

St. Peter—At the annual convention of the Mankato District Christian Endeavor, held in Amboy, Rev. L. S. Hall, pastor of the Union Presbyterian church of this city was re-elected district president for the ensuing year.

Pipestone—Hans Swenson and Charles L. Bailey were caught in the act of seining the Rock river the other day. They came into Judge Gilmore's court today and paid $12.50 each for their experience. They didn't catch a fish.

Eagle Lake.—Smallpox, which broke out here the middle of January and prostrated business, has about run its course, there being but one case at present, and that is a mile from town. There have been forty-nine cases, but none fatal.

St. Paul—Sloane Shane and Louis Riola engaged in a duel with knives in a Swede Hollow, St. Paul, residence. Shane was sent for a bucket of beer. When he brought it back, Riola drank the entire contents of the "growler." This started the slashing.

Winona—The Gun club has arranged to hold its annual tournament on Wednesday, June 27, instead of on Memorial day, as has been done in the past. There will be a dozen events of ten to fifteen birds each, and shooters from other places will participate.

St. Cloud—Minnesota Elks and those of adjoining jurisdictions are planning for a reunion here on June 14 and 15, when the second annual meeting of the state association will be held in that city. The first meeting was held in Duluth last June and proved very successful.

Wadena—The county authorities are working diligently to secure further evidence against Mrs. Fred Klasgey, who is under arrest at Long Prairie on a charge of murdering her former husband, August Ackerman, who resided at Wrightstown, this county, some years ago.

St. Paul—The state game and fish commission have installed an incubator at the Willow Brook hatchery in St. Paul to develop the Japanese pheasants. This is in the nature of an experiment, as it was found almost impossible to have the pheasant bred in captivity.

Pipestone—G. Gunderson, a farmer residing northeast of here, has committed suicide by taking strychnine upon returning home from town. He went to the barn, mixed a drink of the poison, which he kept for the purpose of killing rats, and after drinking it he dropped dead.

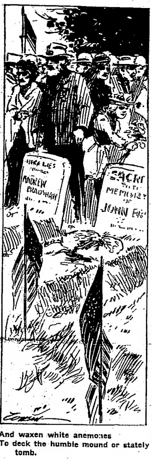
Northfield—The Carleton college annual interclass meet resulted in a tie between seniors and juniors, each securing forty-one points. The sophomores had thirty-nine points and the subfreshmen five points. A heavy track and a strong head wind prevented record-making time.

Greenbush—Sheriff Richmond of Roseau county returned from North Dakota, where he went in search of McKenzie, the alleged murderer of Stewart at Wannaska last January. He found his man at Mickinook, where he had been leading a swift life with several old acquaintance.

Mingling Grave and Gay

Some with Solemn Ceremonies and Some with Joyous Sports Observe the National Day of Memory.

Come, tread
With solemn step and slow to where they rest,
The honored and the blest,
The Nation's valiant dead,
Let hymn and prayer
Sound through the perfumed air
As little children springtide blossoms bear:
Violets, lilies and the lilac bloom,
Daisies from grassy leas



And waxen white anemones
To deck the humble mound or stately tomb.

Some slabs are old and gray,
Crumbling with Time's decay,
And some, aye many, are of yesterday.
And of that meager band
Of comrades left, decrepit, bent and old,
Who stand
Apart, their white locks bared,
How many will be spared
To stand when that To-morrow's tale is told?
Soon on their ears the last great Muster-call
Will fall
And they will pass to join the mighty host
At the Eternal Post.

One!
Two, three—Run! RUN!
Hey! send that in!
Out! Out on first, the everlasting chump!
Our side will have to hump
To win.
Now watch Tim Murphy swat
The ball across the lot.
A fly!
Say, he can't miss it—Yes,
I missed my guess.
Oh, Glory! Why
In thunder did he let that catch go by,
Confound his hide!
Run, Mick, You'll make it. Slide, you sucker, SLIDE!
What's that he said?
Out?
Well, that's about
The rottenest! Someone beat in his head.
Kill him! Ain't that the limit, on the dead?
Say, what's the score?
Well, we can cinch 'em with a couple more.

Whoops, yells
And groan and cheers admiring,
Perspiring
And scarlet bleachers clapping,
Rapping,
Tooting,
Rooting and hooting;
A steady crunch of brittle peanut shells,
A gurgling of the bottles
Inclined to thirsty throttles,
A strewing, not of flowers
From leafy bowers,
But of discarded crusts and scraps of meat.
Sweet
Odors of cheap cigars and cigarettes,
That's what one gets.
That's just one way
We have of spending DECORATION DAY.

Well, such is life,
And memory of death and fame;
A chiseled name
Upon a slab of perishable stone,
To one age with its recollections are
And to the next, a name, and that alone.

And then a man must toil
And play,
And playtimes are too rare to let him spoil
A springtide holiday.

* * * * *

So here, with solemn ceremonies tread
The mourners of the dead,
And here, with frenzied shouts, the fans acclaim
THE GAME.

KENNETT HARRIS.

WHO HAS ARMY ENVELOPES?

Few of These Reminders of the Civil War Are to Be Found To-Day.

In Grand Army halls and at Grand Army campfires, and the stage enactment of civil war dramas, almost everything else is seen in the line of reminders of the days of '61-5—muskets, swords, belts, knapsacks, haversacks, canteens, tin dippers, belts, flags, etc.—but the army envelope is not in evidence. And yet, even at this late day, there is, it is safe to opine, many a carefully treasured specimen of the oblong, illustrated and inscribed inclosure of the soldier boy's letter from the scene of suffering, of strife and carnage, which, if it could speak, might tell a story of sentimental and thrilling interest—one of the tens of thousands of unwritten romances of an heroic age that has no peer in the annals of the camp and field.

IN MEMORY AND IN HOPE.

Over All the Land Flowers Are Tenderly Laid on the Graves of National Heroes.

Forty-two years ago the appalling campaign of the Wilderness, with all its magnificent devotion on both sides, was but two-thirds over, its guns slowly wheeling southward day by day, opposed with a brilliancy and daring the annals of war have rarely seen equaled, while around the heart of the confederacy Sherman was drawing a girdle of fire.

Now, on May 30, all over the land, south as well as north, wherever the grave of a national soldier who fought in the great war is known, his old comrades and his descendants will lay an offering of the flowers which are the perpetual rebirth of earth's beauty.

To the Live Man.

"The world is all gates, all opportunities to him who can use them."

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1878.

One of our exchanges has a fashion of giving us a sly dig and then forgetting to send us a copy of his paper that week, and as he has no subscribers at this office we only hear about it from afar off. Pretty good scheme though and one that never occured to us before.

A man that has always worked for some one else on a newspaper is very apt to get gay if he starts one of his own, and the first person he usually attacks is his friends, which might be a good idea as a puglist usually trains for his fights with one friendly to him.

We are in reciept of several free send offs for candidates for office, which managed to stray into the wast paper basket. Don't worrey about us forgetting you gentlemen for if we consider you entitled to a write up we will give you one and if we do not you will not get it by request or otherwise.

This does not mean our political announcement colum as all candidates are welcome to let the people know they are running for office if they pay the usual rates.

Oklahoma, as it will appear when, a blushing bride, it is decorated with the forty-sixth star on the "spangled banner," is a marvel, even amid that century of marvels which has made the states of the American Union. Its development has no parallel in this or any other country. There is over a million population, which is much more than is possessed by Colorado, Washington, Main or Delaware. The area comprises 70,000 square miles, while Missouri has 69,000 and New York only 49,000. Last year the territory included within the new state raised 14½ million bushels of wheat, 17 million bushels of oats and 110½ million bushels of corn. The country, in addition to its agricultural wealth, is well supplied with vigorous cities and is richly endowed with mineral resources—coal, oil, and natural gas.

A few personality howlers are attempting to make Mr. Jacobson from Lac Qui Parl county biger than the republican party, by claiming that if Mr. Jacobson is not nominated for governor the party is bound to go down to defeat. Nonsense, any one of the Boys who have announced themselves so far are favorite sons, and strong politically, whom the party may feel proud of, no matter which is nominated. But, if strong enough to defeat John A. Johnson at the polls next November remains to be seen. Work in harmony! If you don't land your man, work for your next choice, but, support upright and honestly the nominee of the party to be selected at the Duluth convention. The republicans this year have no reasons so far, and we earnestly hope they will avert just such a calamity as befell them two years ago, that we may present the democrats this year a solid and unflinching front. The different sections of the state are struggling to win the nomination for their respective candidate, which is right and proper. But, in the bunch we don't believe one of them is larger than the party he represent.—Olberg Journal.

OCCASIONAL VISITORS.

Peter Hedin of Kratka who was up here last Sunday to attend the farmers boat meeting is disgusted with the methods of holding homesteads adopted by some of his neighbors. He says they have put up a little tar papered "shanty" and he has not seen smoke coming out of the chimney or stove pipe for the last year. He says one of them showed up last week with a road petition to lay out a road running up to his door and there to stop, and this was the first time I had seen the man since moving up there a year ago last fall, although his homestead was nere to my farm.

Mr. Hedin promptly asked the gentlemen if he expected the people that were living in and improving the country were going to make him a graded road running up to his door so it would be more convenient for him to drive out in his buggy and make an occasional visit to his land. People of this kind said Mr. Hedin, are the main draw back to the settlement and improvement of this country. If they would sell their land to some farmer that would live on it and improve it, it would not be so bad, but they build a tar paper shanty, visit it a few times, and prove it up, and away they go, and that is the last seen of them. If a man comes in looking for land to buy, he finds that this land is owned by John Jones of Chicago and that Mr. Jones does not want to sell but wants to hold on until the other farmers living neighbours to him improves the country and raises the price of his land to $100 per acre.

Eyeglasses and Romance.

It is curious to observe that even the greatest realists do not venture to bestow eyeglasses on their heroines. It is rather odd, too, seeing how many charming women do in real life wear them and are not debarred by them from the most dramatic careers and the most poignant emotions, but while the modern novelist has bestowed eyeglasses on everybody else he has not yet had the hardihood to put them on the nose of his heroine. A. Eve and P. Sullivan have been having a streneaous time trying to get their ferry boat pushed up from Thief River Falls but we expect they will get it up by the time the river freezes up this fall.

Walt McAndress, is pushing the plow now days breaking up new land for flax. Mr. McAndrees is one of the homesteaders that expects to stay here and make his home on the banks of the Red Lake river, and will no doubt have one of the largest and best tilled farms in this locality in a few years.

The big steam boat that has been running on the river for the past three weeks can handle a good deal of freight, but we understand it is to be put to work picking dead heads soon, and the settlers be left with them two little gasoline boats to do their freighting which would be a repetation of last summers root hog or die experience.

Stephen Singer arrived home from Red Lake Agency Tuesday evening having walked the entire distance. He contracted for the sale of all the surpius butter and eggs that the Singer Bros. can get at their store at Rhoda, but says they are not paying any fancy priceses up there at at the presaent timo,

To Scrape an Acquaintance.

"To scrape an acquaintance" was originated by the Emperor Hadrian. Once when visiting the public bath he found an old veteran scraping himself with a piece of broken crockery in lieu of an iron or copper scraper. Hadrian gave him a sum of money to provide the necessary materials for a bath and on his next visit to the institution found it full of veterans scraping themselves with potsherds. "Scrape away, gentlemen, but you shall not scrape an acquaintance with me," was Hadrian's comment as he went out.

The Poet's Inconsistency.

"You speak of the brooks," said the critic as he looked over his friend's poem, "as the most joyous things in nature."

"So they are," said the poet.

"But you are inconsistent."

"Why?"

"Because later on you say they are ever murmuring."

Dodging Him.

Mr. Borem—I didn't see you last Sunday— Miss Cutting—Oh, you must have if you saw me at all! Mr. Borem—I—er—beg pardon. I don't understand. Miss Cutting—I say if you saw me Sunday you must have seen me last, for I was careful to see you first.—Philadelphia Press.

Severe Case.

"How did your sea voyage work, Bigley?"

"I was in such a state of collapse when I reached Liverpool that I cabled back to learn whether I had thrown up my job."

Rivals.

Lulu—You should get him to sign the pledge before you marry him. Babs—Why, he doesn't drink. Lulu—No, but he may be tempted to later.

If thou wouldst have a brother frank to thee be frank to him.—Child.

Reason For Gratitude.

"So you're friendly with Cranker, are you? Why, he tells me that he won't have a thing to do with you."

"That's just why I feel kindly toward the old crab."

Uncomfortable.

"She didn't speak to her husband for six months."

"My, it must have been very uncomfortable!"

"Yes—for her."

He who can suppress a moment's anger may by so doing prevent a day of sorrow for himself and another.—Success Magazine.

Hearses After Night.

There is one kind of vehicle that neither the oldest nor the youngest inhabitant has seen on the street at night, or, if he has seen it at all, only infrequently. That is a hearse. Every other kind of conveyance used by modern man is driven about the streets freely after nightfall—the hearse alone comes under the curfew law. Early hours seem to be imposed upon that somber carriage by common consent. The public doesn't like to see it after dark, and coachmen don't like to drive it. No doubt there are hearses that are compelled by the exigencies of funeral arrangements to come home at unseasonable hours, but when forced to an infringement of the unwritten law they proceed through quiet streets where they will be least likely to wound the sensibilities of the superstitious.—New York Herald.

An Arabian Legend.

The Arabians had a tradition that when the devil started forth from his own place to the garden of Eden he was too lazy to walk and begged all the animals, one after another, to carry him. All refused except the serpent, which was then a quadruped and the most beautiful of all beasts. Yielding to the entreaties of Satan, the serpent took up the devil on its back and carried him the rest of the way, no one knows how far, and after the consequences of the devil's entry into the garden became apparent the angels were commanded to look up the serpent and punish it, so Michael cut off its legs, and it was doomed henceforth to travel about as best it could flat on the ground.

A Pessimist.

"Don't be too anxious to get a husband," said the wise matron. "Don't go around hunting for one."

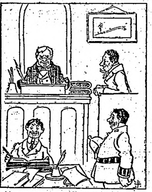
"Think I should just sit down and wait for one, eh?" replied the maiden.

"Yes, for you'll sit up and wait for one often enough after you've got him."

Quite Natural.

Husband—What did you think when you heard the chandelier fall last night? Wife—Why, I thought you had been detained on business again and were getting upstairs as quietly as you could.

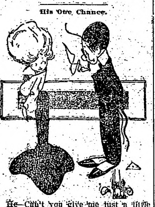
The Laborer Worthy of His Hire.



Magistrate and M. P.—After mature and careful consideration of your case I have come to the conclusion that you are a lazy, good for nothing rogue. May I ask if you ever earned a shilling in your life?

Prisoner—Oh, yes, I have, yer 'onor. I voted for yer 'onor once.—Sketch.

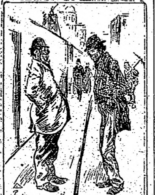
His One Chance.



He—Can't you give me just a little encouragement?

She—Why, yes. A girl friend of mine told me the other day that she'd marry any old thing.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Wrongly Put.



Loafer (to foremah of works)—Is there any danger of getting a job here?—Tatler.

Beyond Reason.

There be two individuals who cannot be reasoned with—a girl in love and a man who is determined to run for an office.—New Orleans Picayune.

Love is never afraid of overwork.—Chicago Tribune.
